Mr David Steel, Leader of the Liberal Party, probably put the view of most MPs when he said that although the statement would not be widely wel-comed, it was bound to be accepted as one of sombre and sad necessity, as part of our general commitment to the Nato alliance.

While agreeing with Mr Steel, Mr Pym pointed out that although Nato had 226 longrange, land-based nuclear sys-tems, the Soviet Union had 930, numumbering the West by four to one. Even if all the 572 cruise missiles to be deployed in Europe were already in existence, we would still be outnumbered.

Earlier, Mr Pym said that Greenbam Common would be the main operating base for the cruise missile units in the United Kingdom and would house six flights. The first units would be deployed by the end of 1983. Molesworth would bause four flights of the missiles.

The decision on the bases stemmed from the need to bring the missiles into service as soon as possible. There had to be adequate accommodation, road communications, access to training areas and suitable dispersal areas.

London Transport is 'weak in skills'

By Michael Baily Transport Correspondent

Strong criticism of London Transport's executive was dis-closed yesterday with the pub-lication, at the instigation of Sir Horace Cutler, the leader of the Greater London Council, of a consultants' report.

That describes the executive as: weak in skills required to run a large business and indeed manage itself as a board; lacking in sense of purpose, agreement on objectives, and clarity in its business cutture; insuffi-ciently outward looking; too preoccupied with day-to-day operations; ineffective in applying remedies and monitoring performance; and above all, failing to act as a corporate board rather than a group of individual members.

The result, say P. A. International, the consultants, is that the executive board "responds to and defends its position to the GLC rather than taking the initiative, and administers, authorizes and responds to the actions of its two businesses rather than directing."

But a somewhat abrasive press conference at London Transport's Victoria head-quarters yesterday Mr Ralph Bennett, the chairman, while accepting the board conclusions cept it as criticism of himself or his board colleagues personally. He made clear that he would continue to the end of his contract in 1983 unless the GLC dismissed him, and the hoped his colleagues would carry on too.
In fact one promising new

The one component still awaited to complet ethe picture (due in the next few days) is London Transport's own report on their current 20 per cent pay award, and how they propose to meet the large deficit that will arise next year".

Asked if in the light of the consultants' criticisms the executive felt qualified to continue, all board members present except two, Dr David Quarmby and Mr Leslie Chapmun, said that they thought the board had all the skills needed. Mr Chapman, whose critical report of London Transport created a stir some months ago, said he found his colleaguan explanations difficult to understand. How to reduce the cost of school fees to £6 a week

Planning ahead can cut the cost of school fees by up to 60 per cent. For example, a parent aged 35 with a child just born can provide £10,000 worth of fees in 13 years' time for just £4,760. The cost, spread over 17 years, will be around £6 per week, with a return of £600 in cash.

But not everyone can plan that far ahead. We, alone amongst brokers, can help parents to reduce and spread the cost out of income when as little as two years remain before a child is due to start

Mr James Callaghan, leader of the Labour Party, was coming under strong criticism last night from some of his backbenheers for surrendering to left-wing pressure on crucial party constitutional issues.

They are likel yto come into the open tomorrow night when Mr Callaghan gives a report to the parliamentary party on the decisions reached by the party's commission of inquiry on three important constitutional issues.

Those decisions are: mandatory submission for reselection of all Labour MPs before each general election, an electoral college to elect the party leader and also to endorse the general election manifesto. The move suggests that the weekend's compromise, centred on an electoral college playing its part both in the election of leader and the drafting of the manifesto, and widely re-ported to be under attack from the left wing, will come under growing pressure from the right as well.

Thatcher hint of curbs on top salary rises

By Fred Emery Political Editor

Mrs Thatcher seized a Commons opportunity yesterday to give her strongest hint to date that top salaried officials and others in the public sector will have to make do with pay rises far below the rate of inflation. Fresh from presiding over a Cabinet committee meeting on public-sector pay, the Prime Minister rejected a Conservative backbench invitation not to be afraid of paying the market

Mrs Thatcher, noting that the report of the Top Salaries Review Body had not yet gone to Cabinet, nonetheless asser-"We cannot go on having the big public-sector wage awards we have had in the past". With production "flat" there was no escaping the fact that improvement in living schrandards for those working in the public sector depended on output in the "marketing sector", she said.

The logical consequence would seem to be nil increases. However Mrs Thatcher is not going that far; she said only that public sector rises would have to be considered carefully f inflation was to be controlled The exchanges on pay led on to an over unemployment between Mrs Thatcher and Mr

Callaghan, the Opposition leader. When Mr Callaghon rose to Conservative backbench over Labour's new electoral college proposals, he threw back: "I can tell Conservative MPs that the country would sooner have me as Prime Minister than the right honour able lady ".

Mrs Thatcher not blushing rose herself, retorted:
"Modesty was never one of his more obvious characteristics". She insisted she was as concerned as suyone else about the increasing unemployment among schoolleavers.

She gave emphasis to the expended youth opportunities programme, but Mr Callaghan insisted that her cuts meant that she was slashing job training programmes, and had no policy remedy.

Expanding on her refusal to print money. Mrs Thatcher then quoted at length from Mr Callaghan's famous speech to the 1976 Labour conference, but Mr Callaghan, oddly, mocked her for being reduce to " quoting that sort of thing" The controversial report from Lord Boyle of Handsworth on MPs' pay is not expected to be ready before the end of this month.

Tories opt for short, sharp party political broadcasts

True to its philosophy of me short, sharp shock, the Conservative Party will tonight give the British public the first five-minute party political broadcast on television by a large party. Until this year, the three large parties have been allowed only ten minute broadcasts. But under new arrangements negotiated in January they are now allowed to split one of their broadcasts into two fire-

Tonight's broadcast will also uphold another Tory principle, that of freedom of choice. It will go our at different times

Grant cuts affect poor families

A code on clothing and footwear grants made it clear that claimants who had lived on supplementary benefit for some time and who had dependent children should be given special

The draft regulations, on the other hand, would give a much more restrictive definition of when grants should be made, including a specific exclusion of replacing outworn clothes.

In addition, the residual discretion in making grants would be much tougher than ministers had indicated when the Act was proceeding in Parliament. On July 17th, Cathay Pacific flies to Hong Kong at the dot of a dragon's eye.

To the Chinese, the dragon is the symbol of honour, energy, kindness, perfection—everything that is good. To "dot the dragon's eye" is to give life to the dragon, thereby bestowing all the qualities of the dragon upon a new venture.

We're Cathay Pacific, Hong Kong's airline, and very much a part of Asia. For the past thirty four years we've been flying throughout Asia, Australia and the Middle East, building an unequalled network of destinations, a unique fleet of Rolls-Royce powered, wide-bodied aeroplanes and a style of inflight service unlike any other airline.

Now we're coming to London, starting with three fast one-stop flights a week to Hong Kong.

We're coming in Rolls-Royce powered 747s, crewed by British and Australian pilots. We'll be first on the route to let you choose fully-reclining Sleeper Seats in the upper First Class cabin (for the same fare other airlines charge for a normal First Class seat). Hostesses from nine different countries and cultures of Asia will bring you free drinks, headsets, movies and a standard of service that could only come from the East.

With the lowest bookable fare to Hong Kong on any airline—£151*Apex mid-week budget fare when you book just 14 days in advance—it looks like the dragon is already casting his spell of good fortune. See your Travel Agent.

In their annual report for 1979, published yesterday, the commissioners say the RSPCA sponsored an advertisement in several national newspapers and magazines through a body called the General Election Coordinating Committee for Animal Protection.

The advertisement urged the public to write to MPs and par-liamentary candidates to seek their views on animal welfare, attend political meetings, put forward their views, find out where the local party stood in that respect and make their views known through the ballot

The RSPCA, the commissioners say, exists to promote kind-ness and prevent or suppress cruelty to animals. It has the power to arrange for the proper conduct of educational and parliamentary activities i

Censorship denied in D-notice system

By Peter Heunessy. Mr Windsor Clarke, group editorial consultant to the West-minster Press and vice chairman of the Defence, Press and Broadcasting Committee, told MPs yesterday that some fellow journalists, in a semi-serious vein, had accused him of being an Uncle Tom" for leading the press side of the body which supervises the system of voluntary self-censorship on defence and intelligence.

He told the Commons Select committee on Defence, which is examining the content and application of the 12 D notices, hat the system could be dis credited within a year if sufficient journalists set out to criticize it. That was most unlikely, as the arrangement enjoyed wide support in the American journalists did not understand the system and did not want it for themselves. European and Japanese journa-lists with whom he had talked, envied it and wished they had a system of advice like that provided by the secretary of the D-notice committee.

He defended the nomination of press members to the committee by bodies like the News-paper Society and the News-paper Publishers Association. An investigative journalist "would not have a great deal to contribute" to the committee because editors took decisions on what was published.

With one exception, the press members felt that there was little that could be done to improve the system. Al-though he did not name him. the lone dissencer is Mr David Chipp, Editor in Chief of the

Mr Clarke was against a twotier arrangement for D notices, whereby some would be published but those containing genuinely sensitive material would remain confidential. The notices kept confidential would only add to the impression of nisguided individuals who suspected the committee of engaging in a cover-up.

The system was preferable to a new, rough secrets law. Mr Clarke, who had sat on the committee for 15 years, said there was a danger that an annual report might breach the confidentiality of editors who sought advice from the committee secretary. A carefully worded description of the system, however, might allay so of the fears that it engaged in

Rear Admiral William Ash, secretary of the committee, also expressed doubts about an annual report. It was not the kind of body that lent itself to that form of accountability. In his first six months in the post, he had dealt with about 30 inquiries, none of which had given him serious trouble. He had suggested a change in wording or that a "slightly different line" might be taken. In the past editors who had inadvertently breached a notice had almost always "been help-ful and apologetic". He denied that the system smacked of self-censorship and a willing-ness by the press to accept Whitehall's definition of sensi-

Religion no bar to cus of child, court rules

A father's legal fight for the right to bring up his young son rather than let the boy go to his mother, a devout Jehovah Witness, failed in the High Court yesterday.

The father, a bank clerk aged 30, who lives in Essex, said that the beliefs of the Jehovah Witnesses would be against the best interests of his son, aged five.

He was worried about the sect's refusal to accept blood transfusion or recognize occa-sions such as Christmas and birthdays, or allow children to take part in school assemblies, Nativity plays and religious education lessons. He feared his son would be isolated from other children by his mother's religious beliefs. On undertakings from the boy's mother, aged 26, that she would not observe those religious rules in respect of her son, two Family Division judges ruled that the child should go to her.

Sir Thomas Hetherington, QC, the Director of Public Prosecutions, yesterday announced that he will not hand back assets seized after the Operation Julie LSD case without a fresh legal battle. Last Thursday the House of Lords ruled that the assets, worth more than £500,000 were seized unlawfully, but made no order for their return.

Making the announcement, a spokesman for the DPP said: "We will wait to see if we are sued". Legal advisers for the three defandants who appealed to the Lords have indicated that they will consider issuing a writ if the assets are not returned.

Sir Thomas made his decision after a conference on Monday evening with Sir Michael Havers, QC, the Attorney General. The argument behind the refusal seems to be that since the Lords made no order there is no compulsion to return the assets, and the defendants will have to sue in the civil Four airlines are to be allowed to compete on the Lonopen skies" policy announced in the Commons yesterday by Mr John Nott, Secretary of State for Trade.

Mr Nott altered a decision announced in March by the Civil Aviation Authority to allow only British Caledonian Airways to compete with British Airways, the established airline on the route, by giving per-mission to both Cathay Pacific and Laker Airways to open Cathay, a British-owned air-line in which British Airways has a 15 per cent interest, but which is based in Hongkong, has been backed by intense political and economic pressure from the colony in its attempt to gain a share of the route.

Cathay said yesterday it intends to start its service on July 17, while British Caledonian will follow two weeks later. Laker Airways will begin on September 1 as part of Sir Freddic Laker's long-term plan to operate a Skytrain service around the world, although the airline will have to obtain permission from the licensing board in Hongkong first.

"I think I have a million don-Hongkong route under an pound winner," Sir Freddie said from Ascot yesterday.

In a fierce response to the minister's decision, Mr Adam Thomson, chairman of British Caledonian, said last night that his airline would certainly operate on the route, "the most important which has ever been awarded to an independent airline", even in its emasculated

It would start with four services a week and would apply for daily service rights, It would offer the lowest fare, at £100 single, and it would ask Mr Nott to look closely at Cathay's close ties with British Airways, including BA's 15 per cent shareholding, its place on the Cathay board, and the strong commercial agreement between the two airlines.

"We won the route fairly and uarely from both British and Hongkong licensing authorities, and we did not expect a reversal of that decision", Mr Thomson

"We have allocated two DC10s to the route at a cost of £20m each, and crew training has already begun."

Luxembourg, June 17

France was criticized anday for widening still further its restrictions on imports of lamb daspite the agreement reached by the Nine last manth, at French bidding, on a new system of support for Community sheep farmers.

A large majority in the Lower House of the Dutch Parliament, including the ruling Christian Democrats who are the senior partners in the centre-right coalition with the conservative Liberals, want the next president of the European Com-mission to be a Dutchman.

There is considerable anger at the Government for having let the presidency slip through its fingers after it was offered to The Netherlands as one MP put it practically on a silver plitte at last week's European simmit in Venice. Before going to Venice, Mr

Her husband went to Dolgellau police headquarters to assist detectives. The couple had been living in the Machynlleth area but it is understood they had owned the bungalow before emigrating to Australia.

Socialists argue that all normal sessions for the rest of 1980, in spite of staff opposition, group's aggressive re is scarcely any may not expressive the sessions for the rest of 1980, in spite of staff opposition, should be held in Strasbourg and that in 1981 at least two plenary sessions should be held in Brussels for the first time to be cut out as a seat let the Council of Ministers know that Parliament will be know that Parliament will be its own master.

The Council of Ministers so far has blocked any attempt to find a single convenient working site for the Parliament and under Article 216 of the Rome Treaty, Parliament has a right to express an opinion.

French members apart, nearly all MEPs have had their fill of excessive travel and the expense of using Strasbourg, Brussels and Luxembourg, as well as national capitals, and they have become far more concerned about the prestige of Parlia-ment itself than the prestige of the French or the Luxem-bourgers.

Mr Glinne said today: "A very large number of members sitive about the of the Socialist group, increas-

"It is not just the various lobbies and pressige. That should not prevent a decision being taken in the interests of Parliament and its members."

Last year it cost about £4m to have a peripatetic European parliament and the figure will be higher this year. But some MEPs accept that to move lock, stock and barrel from Luxembourg, now the staff head-quarters, to Brussels would cost a large sum in compensation to parliamentary staff.

They add that Nato beadquarters moved from Paris to Brussels and the cost was not an issue. What Nato could do the Parliament should do.

Among the difficulties is the fact that the Belgian Government is apparently not keen to become even more the Community capital than it is—the seat of Parliament as well as the Council of Ministers and the Commission and a double diplomatic centre with embas-sies accredited to both Belgium and the EEC.

Nevertheless, the Brussels campaign opening on Thursday will almost certainly in the end succeed. That will leave Stras-bourg, with its ambitions to be the capital, with several bun-dred half-built parliamentary offices on its hands and leave Luxembourg with a grandiose parliamentary building on the Kirchberg Plateau for which nobody has a use.

End of a siege: Hostages being rescued from a doctor's surgery in Graz, Austria, after the gunman who had held them for 21 hours was shot dead by men of an anti-terrordist police commando unit. The ordeal of the 23 hostages started at midday on Monday, when Josef Kis Lukac, a Yugoslav immigrant worker, burst into the doctor's waiting room armed with a double-barrelled hunting rifle (Sue Masterman writes from Vienna). The gunman, a welder who had become redundant and faced expulsion from Austria, refused to free three children among the

Shortly after 8 am yesterday, one of the hostages attacked the gunman from behind. A stray shot from the gunman's hunting rifle gave the Cobra anti-terrorist police squad their signal to attack. The Ambassador said that in honouring Jean Moulin "we salute also the members of the French internal resistance and all the Free French who kept alive the spirit of France and fought alongside Britain, the United States and other allied countries".

The underlying theme of the Ambassador's address was, in fact, that in spite of present arguments France had "re-established herself again in peace, not simply as our ally but also nowadays as our fortieth anniversary parmer".

As Britain becomes self-sufficient in oil, the energy crisis may seem comfortably remote. Such complacency is dangerous.

North Sea self-sufficiency won't last forever. And unless new fields are found and developed, it will barely outlast the decade. Meanwhile, the nation's oil consumption is a moving target: the faster UK demand rises, the harder it will be to keep up with.

So it's as important as ever to use oil efficiently. That means using substitutes for oil wherever possible - burning more coal, for example, in industry and power generation.

It means concentrating oil on the jobs it does best; as transport fuel, chemical feedstock and Jubricant. That's why Mobil is investing over £200 million at its Essex refinery to increase by 60 per cent the petrol that can be made from each barrel of crude.

It also means developing and investing in alternative energy sources, to begin the transition away from society's present oil dependence.

But efficiency and innovation alone won't keep the crisis at bay. Britain must find and develop more of its own oilfields. The Government's proposal to release 90 more areas for exploration should be just the start of a concerted and consistent policy for further North Sea development. A second generation of North Sea fields is essential to ensure that Britain's energy self-sufficiency doesn't become a thing of the past.

Mr Lule says he will not meet Uganda's conditions for return

Nairobi, June 17

Mr Yusufu Lule, who was President of Uganda for 68 days last year, was unable to return to Uganda as he had planned today. Speaking to journalists after spending seven hours at Nairobi airport, he said he was unable to meet the conditions which the ruling Military Commission in Uganda had leid down for his return.

He said Mr Paulo Muwanga, chairman of the commission, wanted him to deny statements which he had made after he was ousted last year, and to disown statements made Ugandan politicians who sup-

Today, after considering statements by Mr Muwanga, he said he thought that President Nyerere of Tanzania had instructed Mr Muwanga to lay down preconditions which he (Mr Lule) could not meet.

He expressed concern at the effect these events would have on the people waiting in Uganda for his return. "I hope there will not be bloodshed." he said. He added: " Today is a day of disappointment for these people. I am disappointed I cannot go home. This is entirely unexpected. Although my body is here, my soul is with them."

Seoul names 329 with a fortnight to give up

From Jacqueline Reditt

South Korea's martial law authorities announced today that 329 people, including two members of Parliament, were on a wanted list and had until the end of the month to give themselves up.

Most of the people on the list were students who were allegedly involved in the mas sive campus demonstrations last month. Twenty men, the suspected ringleaders of the student demonstrations, already carry a 1m won (about £720) price on their heads.

General Lee Hui Song, the martial law commander, said the people on the new list would the people on the new list would be treated more lenieutly if they gave themselves up within the next 13 days. The new list includes Mr Lee Yong Hee, a deputy of the opposition New Democratic Party (NDP), who is wanted on suspicion of subversive activities, and Mr Oh Chi Sung, former deputy of the Democratic Republican Party (DRP). Mr Oh is accused of abusing his political powers in order to smass cal powers in order to amass wealth illegally. The same reason was given by the martial law command for the detention of Mr Kim Jong Pil, the DRP

In addition to the 276 students and two members of Parliament, the new wanted list names 14 politicians, eight university professors, two journa-lists and two clergymen, Insts and two chergymen.

The son, chief secretary and a number of associates of Mr Kim Dae Jung, the well-known dissident and one-time presidential candidate, are also included in the list. Mr Kim was one of the first to be arrested on March. the first to be arrested on May 17 and has been formally ac-cused of financing student leaders, inciting riots and having Communist North Korean sympathies.

The authorities claimed that most people on the list were suspected of having played im-portant roles in last month's student demonstrations. Others were suspected of anti-Government activities, of spreading subversive literature, of being connected with the recent popular uprising in the south-western town of Kwangju and f controlling disturbances from behind the scenes".

The martial law command also announced today that 81 people had been provisionally charged in a court martial with leading miners in a violent riot last April. The miners, demanding wage increases, staged a riot at South Korea's largest privately-owned coal mine, near the eastern town of Sabuk. which resulted in the death of one policeman and many injuries.

An area has been ser aside five miles away for foundries and some have moved. But there is resistance among foundry owners to a wholesale move and the process of re-locating foundries is expected to be a long one.

Even if the power stations and foundries are eventually sited elsewhere there remains, in the view of those concerned for the Taj Mahal, another threat. About 20 miles north of Acra an oil refinery is being built which is expected to start working at the end of this year. For many months of the year the prevailing wind will carry emissions from the refinery to-

Medicine is likely to be the first field to benefit. Commercial and academic labora-tories throughout the United States are beginning to "splice" genes from humans bacteria, which can then produce large quantities of potentially useful drugs such as insulin and Interferon, the anti-viral (and probably anticancer) agent that everyone has suddenly become so excited

Universities, which have filed several patents for the products of recombinant DNA research their faculty members, were also pleased by the ruling. It could bring them a much-needed infusion of funds during a decade of austerity, But others expressed disquiet about the verdict, fearing that the profit motive might begin to exert too much influence on that considerations of safety might be neglected during the stampede to create new forms of life for use in medicine, agriculture, mining and the energy industries.

Although most scientists now believe that the dangers of creating a deadly "super-bug" by genetic engineering were greatly overdrawn in the popu-lar debate about recombinant DNA three or four years ago, not everyone agrees.

It is possible, however, that the importance of the General Electric case has been exag-gerated. The techniques of genetic engineering would bave been patentable even if the Supreme Court had ruled the other way, and some experts believe that patenting specific new production methods may cially than patenting the actual not be good enough for Italy

Rome, June 17.—Italy and Bel-ium conclude the European championship group matches here tomorrow night with an unexpectidly tense encounter. Most experts had tipped either England or Italy to reach next Sunday's final but with the English aiready out. Italy now need a clear will over the Belgians to go through. Lacking the firepower of their hanned striker Paolo Rossi, the Italians have struggled for goals. They have scored only one in the tournament so far. It means that Belgium, with a 1—1 draw against England and a 2—1 winters over England and a 2-1 victory over Spain, need only a draw to win group two.

"At the beginning, everyone undervalued us", said their manager, Guy Thys. "Even I did not think we would get so far". not think we would get so far Mr Thys today announced a team virtually unchanged from that which beat the Spaniards. Only young Erwin Vandenbergh loses his place to Raymond Mommens. who impressed as a substitute last time. But Vandenbergh is almost certain to get his chance during the game when the aging midfield schemer Wilfried van Moer runs out of steam in the second helf.

Enzo Bearzot, the Italian manager, faces sterner problems with his team, who were lifted my victory over England by a 65,000 crowd in Turin last Sunday. But their record of being unbeaten in mainland Italy sluce 1961 includes many draws, and a draw will not be enough tomorrow.

Although England foundered egainst the famed Italian defence. Italy's forwards Causio and Bettega did not impress and Bettera did not impress and Graziani was a poor substitute for the brilliant Rossi. It was left to midfielder Marco Tardelli to score the goal, which cannot have encouraged Mr Bearzot.

Despite the doubts. Mr Bearzot is relying on the same pool that provided the team that faced England, without specifying who would play. Asked if he planned different tactics against the Belgiand, the eternally dour Italian manager replied: "There aren't any. We shall have to play the game as we can." And he cooled off some of his countrymen's enphoria by observing: "It is always nice to heat England, but

Football Correspondent Salerno, June 17

Three months ago England beat Spain by 2-0 in Barcelona and dismissed them as a side of somewhat uncouth tactics and poor co-ordination. Tomorrow in Naples a Spanish team not vastly different could leave them last in the second group of four sides contesting the European championship. The countries stand on level terms in Group Two with something more than a narrow victory required to guarantee an appearance in the third place playoff which will be held on Saturday, also in

The margin of victory will be important as both leaders of the group, Belgium and Italy, who night, already have advantages of goal difference. Quite simply England need to win well. For the operation Ron Greenwood, the manager, has decided to choose a team complemented by the sensitive touch of Hoddle and alert opportunism of McDermott. In fact he has almost completely side, making six changes from the team beaten by Italy on Sunday.

in the middle of the defence but elsewhere no positional stone is unturned. Clemence returns to goal. Anderson becomes right back after an absence of eight matches, replacing Neal who took the brunt of criticism for allowing Italy's goal, Mills, more or less recovered from a fractured wrist, takes over from Sansom at left back. The midfield four are Hoddle, Mc-Dermott, Wilkins and Brooking. an imaginative group Keegan and Woodcock are at the front trying. as Mr Greenwood said, to " regain a partnership that we have missed

This is both an attractive and optentially successful team. but the fact that so many changes have been made and that 19 players will have been used in three matches here in Italy causes three matches here in Italy causes confusion. Mr Greenwood after conducting training here this morning argued that within a "squad" system of 22 all were equal, apart from "one or two positions". That may or may not be so, but surely the purpose of such a system is to allow slight factical and enforced adjustments to be made to a consistent team smacks of uncertainty.

Given that England could not expect to best Italy on Italian soil, they ought now to look upon tomorrow's match as the most important since it offers them the chance of fulfilling their seeding as fourth best team or proving themselves better than that by finishing third. Conse-quently one would not expect the manager to think in terms of "another opportunity to build up what will be a successful World Cup side". He may well have struck upon a better team than what was said to be the definitive version but this seems a late hour Mr Greenwood, after suggesting that he was able to make so many changes because other teams, including Italy, could not match England for strength in depth. said he hoped the side would capitalize on his view that Spain had deteriorated towards the end of their 2-1 defeat by Belgium

However they clung on against Italy before being found defen-sively less adequate against Belgium whose neat close passing going into the penalty area often exposed them. In England's favour Asensi, one of those brought our Asensa, one of those brought back by the Spanish manager. Ladislao Kubala, will not be avail-able to challenge England's mid-field, but Cardenosa returns, Watson once more may be England's most valuable defender if he can stop Santillana getting to the high ball in the penalty area where he is dangerous.

The Spanish central defenders. Alesanco and Olmo are also strong and the goalkeeper Arconada, one of the best in the world. The un-expected from Hoddle and McDermost could win the game for Eng-land, provided there is the desire. One can be sure that Mr Kubala. managing his last Spanish team hefore taking a coaching appointment with Barcelons, will want to leave on a high note.

Government will not support Hampden Park project

The Government will not give a grant towards the redevelopment of Hampden Park football ground in Glasgow. They had considered giving about £8m towards the estimated cost of about £20m.

The decision came in a Commons written answer to Mr Allan Stewart (East Renfrewshire, C) from George Younger, Secretary of State Scottish Office. "I have reviewed the Government's intenreviewed the Government's inten-tion to support the proposed redevelopment of Hampden Park football ground", Mr Younger replied. "Particularly in the light of the latest estimates of the costs involved, I have come reluctability to the conclusion that the Government would not be

"It is evident that the SFA had made a serious error of judgment in assuming that, because it was dealing with representatives of government, it could be expected to be treated honourably.

Tomorow's game is the hardest yet outside the international marches to be faced by the Lions. Every one of the Junior Spring-boks is on the fringe of full Springbok honours. With Afri-kaans oficials hopeful they will be needing to select a 30-strong party for a tour of New Zealand later in the year, the players have every incentive to do well. to Feaver's wheel of fate

By Sydney Friskin John Feaver, who is due to play Brian Gottfried, the third seed, is the Survey grass court tennis championships at Surbinos, found time yesteriasy to talk about the strange quirk of fate which has brought him and live Nastase, of Romania, together in the first round at Wambledon.

After his stormy Davis Cup match against Nastase at Bristol on Monday, Feaver got back to London at 1.0 yesterday morning and went to bed at 2.0. Some hours later, when driving to Queen's Club to practise, he was shocked to bear on his car radio that he was drawn against Nastase. "I simost drove into a lamp-

"This is a bad draw", he added. "I was hoping for an easy match so that I could settle down and meet strong opposition later. Natures is still a great player. I came within two points of winning and I feet that, if I serve as well as I did on the last day at Bristol, I must have a chance of bearing him.

"At Wimbledon we should be able to play tennis because the discipling there will be much stricter and we should be playing under championship rules". Asked to what extent Nastase's boorish behaviour set. to what extent Nactase's boorish behaviour at Bristol had upset him, Feaver said: "If I missed my first serve, he would start talking before I played my second serve. He was just ruining my I want to get at him again because I know I can beat him. I bear him no ill will; we are not enemies. He is very charming and very friendly off court. I was half expecting him to do what he did, it hope I never find myself in similar circumstances again." Feaver thought that the referee should have been much firmer "Yesterday's play at Surbiton be an late because of bad weather.

They were first-round losers in last year's Wimbledon championships, but both have been seeded this time: because they are two of the best players in the world on this time: because they are two of the best players in the world on surfaces that give them more time to think. Having nothing better to do (it was raining) they strolled into the press resizurant at wimbledon yesterday to find out what the draw had to say to them. The news was not good.

Fibak drew Mark Edmondson, a beefy and immidating man who looks as if he could break most opponents in two with his bare hands if the rules encouraged bim to my. Edmondson beat Ken Rosewall and ohn Newcombe to win the 1976 Australian championship and won the first two sets from Bjorn Borg at Wimbledon in 1977. Beyond Edmondson lurk the even larger shadows of Fritz Buebining and Andres Gomex. life. Lester Piggott tried his usual cat-and-mouse tactics of waiting in front on Bonnie Isle. But Willie Carson and Ela-Mana-Mou joined issue rounding the final turu and soon forged clear for a decisive win. At first sight this appeared to be merely a workmanlike performance. But Ela-Mana-Mou was giving 7lb more than weight for age to the runner up and 10th to the 1979 Oaks second, Bonnie Isle.

And the meeting between ElaMama-Mou and Sea Chimes in the Joe Coral Eclipse Stakes will be worth going a long way to see.
The St James's Palace Stakes was the highlight of the day. This group two race prowed a urimph for classic form and also for the judgment of both John Dundop and Eddery. In the Irish 2,000 Guineas Posse had been cantering over his tivals two furiouss from home only to falter in the closing stages. Afterwards both the lockey and trainer were adamant that Posse would be better suited by the turning mile at Ascot. And how magnificently did Posse prove them right.

Delsaan was made an absurdly short-priced favourite at 5-4 on.
Piggott sent the Aga Khan's colt into the lead once in line for home. At this point Last Fandango was trapped in a box with nowhere to go. Dalsaan was soon mastered by his table companion, Final Straw. But Posse was lobhing just behind the leader. Quickeding, smoothly entering the last furlong, the American bred colt beat Final Straw by one and a half lengths with Last Fandango three parts of a length away, third.

Last Fandango would undoubtedly have given Posse a closer fight for his money if Steve Cauthen had been able to extricate the three-year-old earlier, but victory still went to the best house.
Posse is now on target for the Sussex Stakes at Goodwood. This group one race is also the likely objective for the European cham-Sussex Stakes at Goodwood. This group one race is also the likely objective for the European champion miler, Kris.

Recitation's win in the Covenity was a real eye-opener. Well bought for $35,000 by Harwood and James Delahooky at the Keeneland Fall Sales, the Elocationist cold won as though an extra furlong would suit him even betur.

sse takes revenge on the Goodwood trail | Cairn Rouge may find Our Home to be an unwelcome opponent

By Michael Phillips By Michael Printips
Racing Correspondent
The two races confined to fillies look the most interesting at Ascot today on this, the second day of the Royal Meeting. The field for the Coronation Stakes contains the winners of the English and Irish. 1,000 Guineas not to mention the runner-up in the Newmarket classic. That should be a fascinating confrontation. Earlier in the aftermoon, there promises to be a sizeling sprint for the Queen Mary Stakes between those fast two-year-olds, Ancient Regime, Ashbrittle, Labista, Nasseem, Pushy, Sybaris and Welshwyn, to name but seven of a strong field.

Having beaten Milingdale Lillie and Mirs Penny more easily at the Curragh than Quick As Lightning did at Newmarket, Cairn Rouge looks the logical choice to win the Coronation Stakes. Understandably there is an abundance of confidence behind this bargain filly—she cost only 3,000 guineas when she was sold as a yearling by Goffs — and I expect her to give Tony Murray another exhibitarating ride.

However, I must warn anyone who is intent on taking a swipe at the bookmakers that it is easy to detect the same brand of confidence in Our Home's camp and that whereas Cairn Rouge should beat Quick As Lightning without too much fusa, sine is likely to have to pull out all the stops when pressed by Our Home.

Our Newmarket correspondent told me yesterday that Our Home had been going a treat on the gallops recently and that be was sure that she could emulate her elder sister, Roussalks, who won Racing Correspondent The two races confined to fillies the same race in 1975. Our Home receives 4lb from Cairo Rouge and that is a big consideration. Yet I still prefer the Irish filly who won her classic more easily than the judge's margin of two and a half lengths might suggest. Quick As Lightming will be fitted with a pair of blinkers for the first time in public in an attempt to persuade her to put her best foot forward again. John Dunlop, have received a support of the Royal Hunt Cup and the than the judge's margin of two and a baif lengths might suggest.

Quick As Lightming will be fitted with a pair of blinkers for the first time in public in an attempt to persuade her to put her best foot forward again. John Dunlop, her trainer, is clearly of the opinion that she did not exert herself to the full when she finished only fourth in the Oaks. But in my opinion, it may be asking a shade too much to expect her to revert to a mile successfully so soon after running over a mile and a half.

Ancient Regime, the French challenger for the Queen Mary Stakes, is out of a mare called Caterina who was fast enough to win the Numhorpe Stakes at York in 1966. Clearly ber daughter has inherited a fair measure of her speed judged on the way that she is won her only race so far at Evry. But with no lines linking the form of the two countries, it is impossible to know whether Ancient Regime is better or worse than those trained in England or Ireland for that matter.

What is clear though is that they will all have to go s bit to catch the Aga Khan's flying grey. Nasseem, who streaked away with her only race so far at Salisbury. Since then the two who finished closest to her that day, Chateau Dancer and Palumba, have both paid their conqueror a glowing tribute by winning at Newbury. It could easily be in Nasseem's favour that she has been drawn wirtually in the middle of the intended mount of Lester Piggott in the Royal Hunt Cup and the second favourite in most ante-post lists was withdrawn. Piggott has now switched to Ringgit, who was trained by his brother-in-law Robert Armstrong.

John Suncliffe has never been averse to a tilt at the ring before this particular race and twice he has brought off spectacular gambles, initially with Tempest Boy in 1972 and again five years later with My Hussar. In an attempt to win it a third time. Suttliffe is now relying upon Tender Heart, who has been my idea of the probable winner ever since I saw him run with a degree of promise in the Jubilee Stakes Philip Waldron attempted to make all the running on Tender Heart that day at what was a ludicrously fast pace—a sprinter's gallop almost—and not surprisingly be had nothing left when House Guard, Blue Refrain and Piaffer all challenged in the straight. Provided that Joe Mercer, who takes over today on Tender who takes over today on Tender Heart, is more restrained my selec-tion should have plenty of energy left to stage a fast finist.

Police cadets not entitled to claim for unfair dismissal

Wiltshire Police Authority v

Before Lord Denninw, Master of the Rolls, Lord Justice Waller and Lord Justice Dunn

A police cadet is not an "em-ployee" within the meaning of section 30(1) of the Trade Union and Labour Relations Act, 1974, but a person being taught in the hope that he or she would then become a member of the police force. Accordingly an industrial tribunal has no jurisdiction to entertain a complaint of unfair dismissal brought by a police cadet before the completion of her 2½-year service under the Police Act, 1964, and regulations made under it.

The Court of Appeal allowed an appeal by the Wilshire Police Authority from the Employment Appeal Tribunal (Mr Justice Phillips) (The Times, February 22), which had affirmed an industrial tribunal and held in favour of ributal and held in favour of an applicant, Miss Philippa Wynn, of Borelamwood, Hertfordshire, on a preliminary issue of law that she was entitled to bring a complaint of unfair dismissal against the authority under the Act.

Mr Eldred Tabachulk and Mr Richard Field for the police authority; Mr T. R. A. Morison, QC, and Mr Paul Corben for the applicant,

The MASTER OF THE ROLLS said that Miss Wynn became a police cadet when she was 16 and was dismissed after less than two years. She applied to a Bristol industrial tribunal claiming that she had been unfairly dismissed. The preliminary point was taken by the police authority that the provisions of the 1974 Act on unfair dismissal did not anoly to her: dismissal did not apply to her; dismissal did not apply to her; but the tribunal and the Employment Appeal Tribunal found in her favour. The authority now appealed.

Miss Wynn was accepted in 1976. Her qualifications showed her as a promising young woman, with about 10 O levels and playing all kinds of sports. The chief in-spector of training in a letter to her father said that she would her father said that she would undergo cadet training until the age of 181 when, provided her training had been satisfactory, she would remuster as a probationary constable into the force.

Her training would be in two phases. During the first she would attend the College of Further Education at Devizes for academic training on three days each week and the remaining two days would be taken up by physical and sporting activities at the head-quarters. During the second phase quarters. During the second phase she would be attached to stations throughout the county to provide her with experience in police work. In addition she would assist in community work and attend courses of a character-building statement.

Apparently she did remarkably well until a few months before she was dismissed in July, 1973. Her explanation on the application form to the industrial tribunal was: "I was dismissed because I was wrongly accused of disobeying orders"; and she asked for reinterment.

The question was whether a police cadet qualified to go to an industrial tribunal under the 1974 Act. Schedule I, paragraph 4 of the Act provided that "every employee shall have the right not to be unfairly dismissed by his employee". So she had to be an "employee", and section 30(1) defined "employee" as "an individual who has entered into or works under . . . a contract of employment, otherwise than in police service"; and "contract of employment" was defined as "a courract of service or of apprendiceship, whether it is express or implied and (if it is express) whether it is oral or in press or implied and (if it is express) whether it is oral or in writing.

"Police service" was defined as service as "a member of a police force or a special constable". It was plain that a police cadet was neither, nor had be or she the powers of privileges of a constable, so she was not in the police service. What was said on her behalf was that she had entered into or worked under a contract or service or apprenticeship.

The industrial tribural rejected the submission that there was a contract of apprenticeship on the facts, and his Lordship thought that the finding was decisive. The tribuant said that the dissimilaritribural said that the dissimilarities were such that a cadetship could not be equated with an apprendicestip. An apprendice learne a trade; a cadet was not taught to be a policeman; "his training is mostly of a general kind only; training to be a policeman does not start until after the policeman is appointed. If a cadet's training were to be broken off halfway through, he would not have learnt anything which would fit him for police work," So Miss Wynn was not an apprentice.

Wynn was not an apprentice.

Did she work under a contract of service? Those words had been interpreted by the common law and in innumerable statutes, and very much depended on the particular statute or the relationship being considered.

Before 1962 police cadets were an odd group. In some places they were a kind of clerk and employed by local authorities. The Royal Commission on the Police in 1962 said that it was important at a time when increasing reliance was being placed on the cadet service to improve the police force that cadets should enjoy a proper standing as junior members of the force with national rates of pay standing as junior members of the force with national rates of pay and conditions of service. That recommendation was given effect to in the Police Act, 1954, which recognized the position of cadets and made it stantory.

Section 17(1) said that "The chief officer of any police force may, in accordance with regulations . . appoint persons as police cadets to undergo training wath a view to becoming members of that police force". Other sections showed that the object was tions showed that the object was that cadets should undergo train-ing until they were 184 with a view to becoming members of the police force. The next step after training was, if they were found suitable, to become probationary constables. It was interesting to see from the police regulations that when the police regulations that when a person became a probationary constable the regulations dealt with them with regard to pay uniforms and so on, and also what happened if they were dismissed or seemed unsuitable, and that they were given a period of notice and were entitled to a hearing and so forth. But when a ing and so forth. But when a person became a constable he did not come under the 1974 Act and could not go to an industrial tribunal to claim unfair dismissal. It would seem odd that proba-tionary constables could not claim for unfair dismissal if a police cader should be able to do so; for the cader regulations had a number of provisions which corresponded to probationary constables. It seemed odd in view of the code in the regulations on the terms on which police cades served or were employed that there served or were employed that there should be an additional or supplementary procedure by way of complaint under the industrial

Another point was that both police constables and police cadets would be protected under section 17 of the Sex Discrimination Act, 1975, and section 16 of the Race Relations Act, 1976, under which they were treated as employed. No doubt on sex or race grounds there could be a complaint of such discrimination to a tribunal; but that was by the way and did not solve the question whether a police cadet was under a contract of service.

Section 17(2) and (3) of the Police Act dealt specially with police cadeta. Sub-section (2) said:

"Subject to such regulations as aforestid, all police cadets." shall be under the control of, and subject to dismissal by, the chief officer of police"; and subsection (3) provided: "Without prejudice to subsection (2) above, the police authority by whom a police force is maintained shall, for the purposes of any exactment relating to the functions of employers and of any rule of law with respect to the vicarious liability of employers, he treated as the employer of any police cadets undergoing training with that force."

That was an unusual position.

That was an unusual position. The person who appointed, controlled and dismissed police cadets was the chief officer of police; but the body which paid them and was responsible for any tort or wrong-doing was the police authority. That was a division of powers or functions—what the Appeal Tribunal described as a hybrid position. But it did not appear to help on the particular question, whether or no a police cadet was employed under a contract of service.

Many analogies had been taken, contract of service.

Many analogies had been taken, going back to the position under the old paupers legislation in considering what was a contract of service or an effective contract of apprenticeship. Those old cases distinguished between teaching and learning as the primary purpose on the one hand and service for a master, work done for the master, as the primary purpose on the other. That distinction was helpful in the present context.

His Lordship thought that a

As the chief inspector had said in evidence: "The purpose of training is not to become a police constable but for the chance of becoming a police constable. The constable is doing police work and the cadet is seeing him doing it."

That was a valuable distinction in this type of case. The cadet was not really doing work as a constable at all nor serving as such. What Miss Wynn did did not come anywhere near to doing work for the police service or in the capacity of a constable. It seemed parallel with so many cases in which young people now-adays might go into training or be educated, even being paid while training; but that did not make them under a "contract of service". One had to get to a further stage where under their contracts they were doing work of a substantial kind which was of value to their employer. Until value to their employer. Until that stage was reached they were not properly under a courtact of service. If that was so it meant that Miss Wynn was not under a contract of service and did not qualify to come within the pro-visions of the industrial legisla-tion and go to the industrial

As a probationary constable or full constable could not apply to an industrial tribunal for unfair dismissal it would seem extraordinary if a police cadet could do so. The police cadet occupied a special position in the police hierarchy.

a special position in the police hierarchy.

It would also seem extraordinary if when there was a power of dismissal in the chief officer of police a claim for unfair dismissal had to be made against the police authority under section 17. That would seem inconsistent and was another difficult question of construction of the section.

But on the general position a construction of the section.
But on the general position a police cadet was not under a contract of service. His Lordship would allow the appeal and hold that the industrial tribunal had no jurisdiction to entertain the application.

LORD JUSTICE WALLER, in a concerning indepent said that it concarring indement, said that it was submitted for the police authority that not only was there no contract of employment but no contract. It was unnecessary to decide that. The question was: to decide that. The question was; was it a contract of service or apprenticeship? His Lordship considered that the tribunal was right in finding that it was not an apprenticeship; and he agreed with the Master of the Rolls that the cadets at the end of their training were much more like someone who was training at a college. It could not be said that Miss Wynn was working under a contract of service. It was neither service nor apprenticeship.

LORD JUSTICE DUNN, also

service nor apprenticeship.

LORD JUSTICE DUNN, also concurring: said that the Appeal Tribunal, having accepted that the cadet period was for the purpose of training, went on to find that the terms of engagement of police cadets were consistent with a contract of service. They failed to give sufficient weight to the question: what was the nature or substance of the relation created? There was on the authorities and

There was on the authorities and under the Act not a contract of service.
Leave to appeal was refused.

There's only one place an Englishman should sell his home.

If you're selling a house The Times is right up your street. Or private road. Simply because we sell more property than any other national daily newspaper. Hardly surprising. Times readers can, after all, afford to live in the style to which they're accustomed.

In fact you'll find that 152,000 of our readers have bought a house in the last two years. And nearly 20% own their property mortgage-free.*
So when it comes to selling your own home, set it in the perfect surroundings.

The "Property Columns" are published daily with a special support feature every Wednesday. To place your advertisement or for further information contact The Times Property Team on 01-837 3311.

Beneath the mask of gentility

Driving away from Taunton station the other day William Trevor said there had been a knifing behind the lavatorics at the county cricket ground. The image is vividly Trevorian—sudden sordid violence disturbing bucolic quiet; English gentility reveoled as red in tooth and claw. This inconeruity must through much incongruity runs through much of his fiction, notably in The Old Boys, that viciously funny story of schoolfellows who never really left school; in The Children of Dynmouth in which evil stalks a cosy English seaside recort; and most draseaside resort; and most dra-matically in his latest, Other People's Worlds, out tomorrow. Trust Trevor to use a tea-pot as a murder weapon. This time, despite appearances, "niceness" triumphs. The knife behind the lavatories is still there, but the cricket is more important; or as he puts more important; or as he puts it in another snalogy it may be true that you can feed a whole Indian village on what the Royal Family gives its corgis, and that may be deeply shocking, but the Royal Family is still quite nice or, in Trevor's phrase "actually rather a good thing". Nothing for Trevor is black and white, nor quite what it seems. what it seems. He is in his fifties now, the

He is in his fifties now, the sort of author who wins prizes and about whom doctorates are composed by earnest for-eigners searching for elusive significances in his work. One recently asked why all his books take place in summer. Trevor was baffled. He had not noticed. "I'm an instinctive writer", he says, apologetically. He will not, for instance, discuss any book on which he is working. "It's pointless, they always change." And when he does offer a view of his writdoes offer a view of his writ-ing such as "I think it's really just a curiosity about sur-faces", or "I have an Irish-man's fascination with another country", he floes so diffidently and speculatively, as if be is the last person to know.

Although his novels are more praised than bought he has carved out a handy hving by turning many of his short working on one at the moment as well as a three-part adaptation of his novel Elizabeth Alone for the BBC. Once or twice he has sold the rights to his books and lost control of them, sometimes with disastrous results. "I sold The Old Boys to someone who reduced their age and therefore lost the whole point of the book. He also introduced a sperm bank. I couldn't understand what the hell they were up to. And one of the Old Boys had acquired the ability to fly. Trevor was so distressed by it that he flew to New York to persuade the man to drop the idea. He remembers a ludic-rous day in a bar, arguing over

For more than 10 years he and his wife have lived in a secluded Victorian house in a valley just over the Devon border from Somerset. Metropolitan friends are aghast that he should cut himself off from London where he used to live but he protests that there is stimulus enough in the country. "If you write about people you have to be among people", he concedes. "You've got to go into the hardware store and buy nails. But going into the slightest area of human activity will do perfectly well, even if it's simply going to the post office in Dunkeswell to post letters." "I much prefer not to know a lan-guage", he says, "I like being a stranger." He enjoys the idea of sitting in the corner of a railway carriage, observing, of wondering, inventing. In fact an be said he would cheerfully "Vivacel to Paris and then take sto the first train back just for the experience. "It's much better just watching" he says. "You must look across the hotel lounge and wonder." He loves to watch people and invent lives and characters, personalities and dramas for them.

In Italy it will be restored so that far from being tempted to write an Italian novel he will give us another English or Irish one with, perhaps, a renewed sense of perspective. There may be an Italian short story but then "What is an Italian short story?—a story that takes place in Italy?"

Perhaps. But it will be intriguing to see, when the time comes, what Florentine metaphor he will discover for that might if people want an entertaining evening of said comedy, the entrancing leading actress, Julie Walters, will not be an RSC regular and the highlyregarded director, Mike Ockrent, is certainly not from the rent, is certainly not from the Stratford stables.

Entertaining evening of sad comedy

Mr Russell has not been too avidly sought by the company and the performance by Mark Kingston, in the one other role, is somehow different in kind Is somenow different in Kind, from normal RSC performances. I would guess that the company is busy in its major undertaking, Nicholas Nickleby, and that that may account for the West End try-out feel of Mr Russell's play. But it would be silly not to welcome it: the deft moments of its best comedy are solendidly refreshing. are splendidly refreshing.

Mr Russell bas taken a look at two segments of English society and engineered a col-lision that is as full of regret as it is of promise. In the dusty sealed chamber of a university office he presents a professor who clings to whisky bordes, having abandoned his desire to be a poet. He awaits his first session with an Open University student, having taken the job only to pay for his drinking.

he immediately tries to step down as her tutor. What she wants to learn, however, she believes he can teach her; and the play goes forward by short scenes in the office as Rita challenges E. M. Forster and Peer Gynt with her plain-spoken Northern wit.

Mr Russell turns wir against all sides and Rita is lured be-yond education into the casual student world of literary arguments and late-night parties. She leaves her husband; bus what seems more important is the way she seems to leave her working-class origins behind. The limitations of literary examinations replace for a moment the limitations of singsongs in the pub. There is a parallel drama in Frank's increasing dependence on Rita's visits and his own adoption of her earliest naive criticisms; and for a while both stories develop warmly. But somewhere in the middle Mr Russell softens it all. By the end he is refashioning a comedy from material that had become

First impressions of the Erick Hawkins Dance Company are of an upusually quiet, gentle way of moving. Opening Sadler's Wells Theatre's three-week season of American dance on Monday, they gave three works, each in a different genre, but all with an understated qualityraising his voice, the effect is to make von concentrate harder in case you miss something.

Another feature common to all three works is that like almost all of Hawkins's choreography, they have specially written scores, which he insists on havng played live : there is not a taped score in the repertory.

At the second concert of this year's Elgar Choral Festival on Monday, Worcester's Donald Hunt concucted a performance of The Apostles, a work which, despite its long, extensive narrative, can be every bit as arresting as the intensive and more obviously immediate soul-journey of Gerontius that we beard in the first concert last beard in the first concert last week. What makes the work curiously powerful is the origi-nality of its dramatic concep-tion, the concentration of the word-setting, the juxtaposition and integration of ideas, like the storm within Mary Alagda-lene and the storm outside her at sea, the telescoping of the approach to the suicide of Judas and the death of Christ. and the death of Christ.

We also heard a neat per-formance of Stravinsky's "Three Shakespeare Songs", and the final piece in this short concert was "The October Country", by Derek Foster, the pianist of the Musica Viva ensemble. The piece is based on several years short monife on several very short motifs which first are juxtaposed and then interact; a climax in reached whose resolution makes the closing pages more con CITUOUS.

Hands down for Wagner production

Parsifal Covent Garden

Stanley Sadie

The new Royal Opera Parsifal has been unfortunate. When first given, in April list year, it was bandicapped by the loss of technical rehearsal time through an industrial dispute. Now the same has happened: on Monday it had to be given in pared-down form, with props but virtually no scenery.

We saw enough, however, to gain some idea of its character. Of the serting, by Farrah, we had little other than an octagonal platform in the middle of the stage, its silvery surface broken up into a maze portern, and an overhanging pair of tree-like shapes, decayed and distorted (they are covered in flowers in Act II). The lighting, specially adapted for this sparse revival, contributes a good deal, for example an inflammatory tinge in the flower

Mr Nott (St Ives, C) said that last year British Caledonian, Laker

Both authorities heard evidence Both authorities heard evidence separately on these applications (he said). In December the Hong Kong Authority licensed British Caledonian and Cathay Pacific, but restricted their frequency of service to four and three flight a week respectively. In March this year, the Civil Aviation Authority announced its decision to license only British Caledonian.

The two applicants who were unsuccessful before the Civil Aviation Authority submitted appeals to me under the provisions of Regulation 16 of the Civil Aviation Authority Regulations 1972.

I also received a number of

In his evidence he described this market as confishing of "the forgotten men and women at the bottom and of the market "—who might wish to fly if they could afford to do so: I find myself in agreement with this dynamic approach to civil aviation and in my view it should be acknowledged.

I also felt that the authority

I also felt that the authority had placed too much emphasis on the economics of the proposed additional services in the short term, and too little on the benefits to the development of the United Kingdom civil aviation in-dustry generally of choice of service and competition on a route such as this — in particular com-petition with other hon-British I felt that it was in the interests of airline passengers that they be offered a wider choice of

I concluded therefore that the substantial new traffic likely to be generated over a period by a wider variety of services would offer a reasonable prospect that four operators could, over a period, arhieve an economic return on this routh.

And urban blacks permitted to live in townships are becoming a diminishing elite. Those without a pass, or without employ-ment, or without a home, or migrant workers without a con-tract, all may be "endorsed out" to be dumped in infertile country, often with only a lat-rine bucket and a tent, in what can only be described as rural towns without prospect of work. The best agricultural land is for whites. A forced migration of 4m people is planned, of which nearly balf has taken place. In Africaner Newspeak, these are "betterment plans" for "homelands" thought up by the "Ministry of Co-opera-tion and Development". Since there is no work, the men must leave their families to find it elsewhere - but they are for-bidden to search in urban areas. So the "homelands" consist of women and children and elderly.

And those migrant workers hostels! I visited a block for 12.000. like a huge prison. without refuse collection, with one telephone, six beds crammed into each room. One man told me he'd been living in such a hostel for 20 years, visiting his stranger wife and children 200 miles away only twice a year. Even the white Dutch Reformed Church has described this situation as a creeping cancer ".

For most decent whites. apartheid is out of sight. How migrant workers hostel? How many have seen the queues at one black hospital Durban, a city of one million blacks? How many have seen, as I saw, a black school on the platoon system " (we'd call it shiftwork"), with 85 children in one class room, kneeling on floor and writing benches because there were no education compared to 551 rands on each white child. Hence the schools boycott during my visit.

Even more marked than dispossession of the land (13 per cent for 80 per cent of the nonirlation) was economic dispossession. Great wealth is pro-duced in the "central core" around Johannesburg, largely by migrant workers from outlying areas. These lie in concentric circles; first "homelands", then the small dependent nations of Swaziland and Lesotho, then the more distant countries of Mozambique and Malawi. The wealth remains in the centre: it canareas into the black homes of those who actually produce it.

The blacks are patient, happy, few militants they have until recently acquiesced in their Zimbabwe, perhaps it is the guerrillas from Mozambique, perhaps it is the civil war already beginning on the borders of Namibia—whatever the cause, the fact remains: blacks now know they are going to win. They no longer want to tamper with apartheid: they are going to dismantle it.

There are four times as many blacks as whites, and they now know, sooner or later, there will be majority rule. They now take amazing risks. They now accept that some of them will be casualties. Like the Children of Israel in Egypt, they are awaiting their Exodus. (Inci-dentally the Boers used the very same imagery when con-quered by the British, but like others who have reached the Promised Land, they behave with great insensitivity.) So far violence is the characteristic not of the blacks, but of the white administration, Blacks are peaceable people; but if peaceful persuasion or mass civil disobedience fails, there will be terrible bloodshed. And events are moving fast. . . . The only hope of peaceful transformation lies with the Church. Only the Church can bridge the divisions of black and white, Boer and British, rich and poor. And this is a very religious country, where the 7 pm news is prefaced not by the weather forecast, but by Psalm, and where Ascension

Dutch Reformed Church, comprising 60 per cent of the population, holds the key. The Coloured Reformed already opposes apartheid, and theological justification for it by the white Reformed becomes increasingly difficult. The Anglican Church (15 per cent of the population) is constantly harassed. For instance, the Dean of Johannesburg was on a charge for living in his own Deanery (a black man in a white area): an Anglican priest was forbidden a pastoral visit to South America. The police forbad debussing for the thousands due to attend a Cathedral service in toank-giving for John Thorne's release, (It will took place with diminished numbers.) The day I left the Prime Minister accused Bishop Tutu, the Anglican Secretary of the South African Council of Churches, of using over firm to forment unrest-the Bishop challenged him tin vain of course) to an open debate to substantiate such monstrous

Bishop Tutu of his deprived passport, but cannot take away his international reputation as a loving and fearless Christian. Can we help? Should we help? It was our own Parlia-ment which wrote into the one thousand nine bundred and nine Act of Union the possi-bility of black disenfranchise-ment. Our own country has supplied half the vast overseas investment which has made possible the imposition of apartheid. It is treasonable in South Africa to premote disinvestment, but if moral arguments over here fail to carry conviction and it British firms continue to par less than a living wage, at lesst British businessmen should be under no illusion about the mortal danger to British investments when there is a majority government in South Africa And South Africa today is very sentitive to foreign preseure.

Meanwhile in this beautiful yet tragic land, so rich in resources, so deeply religious, so teribly divided, there remains -just-un uneasy peace.

He is the immensely influential but lesser-known figure of Herr Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the Vice-Chancellor, Foreign Minister and leader of the liberal Free Democrat Party. To most non-Germans Herr Genscher is, it anything, simply a skilful foreign minister who doggedly pursues West Germany's complex interests with intinite tact and reasonableness. Yet at home he is, after the Chancellor, the key figure on the political scene.

He is the undisputed leader of a small party-7.9 per cent in the Bundestag-which can tip the balance of power between the two bigger parties. Herr Schmidt and his Social Democrats could not govern without the FDP. If Herr Genscher's political instincts told him the time was right which at the moment they do not-they could change sides and bring the Christian Democrats to power.

In the months before the election the FDP will be field-ing Herr Genscher as their big star. The development of the compaign into a personal duel between Herr Schmidt and Herr Strauss worries the Free Democrats—they know that in a highly emotional two-sided fight of this sort they can easily get forgotten.

This danger was demonstrated on May 11 in the North Rhine-Westphalia state election. After a colourless campaign which failed to distract voters from the Schmidt-Strauss issue they fell below the five per cent minimum needed for representation.

Hence the build-up of Herr Genscher into the third big figure in the election—to remind the public constantly that three, not two, parties are fighting. Human nature, the bookmaker's friend

Not for nothing is that extraordinary aberration of the States, Probibition, as "the Experiment Noble ". (The words are those of disorder than drink ever did or, Herbert Hoover, who wrote "A ereat social and economic experiment, noble in motive and fer-reaching in purpose ".) For there were two strands to the campaign that eventually resulted in the Volstead Act and its consequences, and only one of them was malignantly motirated. To be sure, that onethe terrible desire to stop other people enjoying themselvesquickly became the dominant one; the wowsers drowned not only the voices but even the very thinking of the truly noble experimenters, those who saw the terrible effects that alcohol could have and, utterly misun-terstanding the causes of those affects, failed to see that the misery produced by alcohol was the product of the same forces that made the drinker drink, so that eliminating the drinking would have no effect at all on the misery; nor did it. But it was not an ignoble impulse for men to wish that other men would stop destroying them-selves and their families, or to believe that if the destroying agent could be removed from their reach they would lose the impulse that drove them to-wards that destruction. .. If, however, we leave the Experiment Noble was to cause far more misery, crime, death, eft to itself, ever would have done; and I am not, of course thinking of those who went mad or blind from drinking imperfeetly distilled "bathtub gin" and the like. What happened when Probibition was enacted into law was that crime turned to the supply of that which could no longer be lawfully provided, but which people simply refused, law or no law, to go without. The result, as we know, went rather further than the adding of two words (bootleg and hijack) to the language; it was to increase, to a vast, indeed immeasurable, extent, the incidence of organized crime, gangwarfare and murder. purpose was to make the United States a more peaceable and mutually loving society; it had exactly the opposite effect, and from much of the evil it produced that country is not free yet, and never will be.

What has all this got to do with anything that has anything to do with what you are interested in? Why, in short, this thusness? Because I have been contemplating the state of affairs in Britain's gambling industry, and the more I con-template it the more it reminds of American Prohibition.

tion, there remains the inescap- was to enable the innocent citiable fact that the result of the ran who liked an occasional flutter to have it within the gambling, then an occasional flutter, and of those who were willing to provide them with the facilities they required to indulge their craving. And the result has been what any student of Prohibition, or for that matter of human nature, could have told the worthy legislators it would be. Of course, the result has not been as terrible and widespread as the ravages caused by Pro-hibition; but in its essence it has been the same—that is, an attempt to make homen beings less wicked by passing laws has led to a substantial increase in wickedness. Some of the principal gambling-casino chains have been prosecuted, or are to be prosecuted; naturally, I make no comment on any particular case that might be the subject of such legal action. My object is a general one; it is to point out that where there is gambling there will be crime, because gambling has roots in some human beings that are far deeper and more tenacious than any law can plant, and the desire to profit from the impulse to gamble that lies within those who have those motives—of both kinds of Pro- Our Gaming Acts were designed roots is likewise stronger than hibitionist—out of considera to do two important things: one the fear of the consequences

None of this, I submit, did any serious harm. The cor-ruption of the police by the bookies went no further than the slipping of a pound or twoto the bobby on the corner to persuade him to face the wall as the bookie's runner ran by, and as any who ever attended any of Mr Aspinali's gambling-salous will testify, they were run with scrupulous rectitude and in conditions of consider-able elegance. But the point is that everybody, from Chief Constables to Mr Aspinall, had instinctively grouped the truth, which was that people who wanted to gamble would gamble, and provided they did not "do it in the street and frighten the horses" it was best to let them be.

But that would not do for the tidy-minded, for those who believe that changing human consequences of the craze for nature is no more than a matter Bingo (now, happily, much de-all in the previous conditions.

The betting-shops have produced gang-warfare on a scale previously unknown in Britain: it is nothing, of course. like the activities of the American gang-sters under Prohibition, but that is not the point, for we must compare what Britain is with what Britain was, and foreign comperisons are irrelevant. As for the casinos, they have led to some of the most disgusting scenes in post-war Britain, with rival groups vying with one another to see which can being over to Britain the largest num-ber of rich fools and scaundrels from Araby, America and centinental Europe to put their wealth into the pockets of the casinos' proprietors by night, spending their days drinking. whoring and bouncing cheques. We British are suffering badly from architects. We suffered badly in the sixties when they gave us tower blocks to live in. and in the seventies when we put up to replace the tower blocks when they fell down we were no better oif. There are no longer even any minimum standards governing the size of the rabbit hutches a great many of us are obliged to inhabit.

That is the view of Sutherland Lyall, editor of the journal Building Design, who has cast building for a new book, The State of British Architecture. The state of house building, he concludes is not good, although there are height parches obse-14"121 2.

"Architects failed on tower blocks because they did not think sufficiently about actually living in them. Now they have gone back to traditional lowrise council housing, but the interiors are every but as had. No thought is given to the occupants; they still design kitchens with no room for a washing machine, surely an essential piece of equipment nowadays?, Lyall told me.

"Wherever you go in the country, whatever the council houses look like on the outside, they are almost invariably and ill thought out, and built to quite appalling standards." Lyall notes that housing authorities now fice truly enormous naintenance bills for the housing thrown up in the sixties, but here has been no improvement in standards. The only oright shot at present, he vernacular of Milton Keynes, thinks, is that councils are so where the patronizing architects short of money they cannot even afford to put up bad housing.

"The trouble with architects is that they think they know it all. They design in a patronizing way-homes for gnomes, for people who do not know any the Byker Wa'l, better". Lyall ventured. could do my sho

Having looked at public sec- sightseeing tours to tor housing in several European countries Lyall concludes that their exteriors are, if anything, even uglier than our own, but a great deal more thought goes into their interiors.

Fair enough. Council housing (with a handful of notable ex-captions, it must be said) is hardly a monument to gracious living. But Lyall goes on to be come moderately excited at the Byler Wall, that gargantuan slab of concrete, almost visible from the Moon, in which a great many citizens of Newcastle upon Tyne are obliged to live.

Lyall admires it because it is adventurous and zany, and a little raniness is what British architecture needs to lift it out of its doldrums. Much better. he hinks, than the neo-

Moreover to object to the presence of any particular system of nuclear weapons is to tackle the part rather than the whole of the question. The totality of British strategy and that of the whole Nato alliance, is one of deterrence through possession of nuclear weapons. This position requires that the weapons are varied and modern enough to maintain their credibility in the face of the Soviet Union's recent introduction of much larger nuclear missiles, many of which, incidentally, are targeted specifically on western Europe so that they elude the production limitations agreed at the Strategic Arms Talks. The Soviet Union may now be facing a period of secular decline in its economic capacity but its military power will be the last to suffer. For the western alliance that suggests an even greater need to maintain its nuclear defence during a period when the Soviet military machine will become ever more dominant within that country's councils. Hence the cruise missile should bave been no accidents, be a welcome addition to the miscalculation over European-based nuclear arsenal.

'GERMANY HAS REASON TO COMPLAIN

Although it would have been politically handy for Mr Pym to station the missile flights at Lakenheath, where a recent local ballot of sorts showed tor having Cruise over not having it. the choice was eventually dictated by the need to find bases with surplus capacity. The other point of criticism about the locality, which will no doubt be developed in detail by those critics who are against the whole principle of nuclear deterrence, is that the Cruise missile's par-ticular advantage lies in its ability to be dispersed away from its base. Thus in an emergency the base itself might not he so much of a potential target as the surrounding countryside into which the missiles had been dispersed.

Safeguards about operating and training procedures are legitimate areas of enquiry and Mr Pym could have been more forthcoming about the agreements covering the actual firing of any missile in war. But nothing is gained in the long term by dwelling on the possi-bility that the choice of any particular base make one area of Britain-and therefore some of its citizens-more vulnerable as a nuclear target than any In the terms in which this country under governments of both major parties has maintained a policy of nuclear deterrence unchanged for thirty years, we are all in the target area.

Test for monetarism

From Mr George Goyder Sir, Professor Havek (June 13), warms the Government that radical measures will soon be needed to enable it to succeed in its policy of monetarism. To clear the ground for balting inflation he proposes to rescind all the special privileges which have been granted to the trade unions". Professor Hayek must know this suggestion is impractical. What is more it is unjust. Why should special privileges be taken only from the workers? What about the special privileges of capital? By what right do equity or common shares convey the penmanent control of a public company? Is not this special privilege? The Christian tradition of 18 centuries has declared permanent debt to be against the moral law. It is only since 1862 or thereabouts that debt has been made unredeemable by law and control given in perpetuity the moneylender. The result is to featherbed risk capital in giant avoidance conglomerates like GEC, while excluding workers from a say in the company from inside. trade unions are the netural and inevitable reaction. Nor there any hope of reforming the unions until we have begun to reform the commany.

If the cure of inflation weits upon the application of justice, then it is to the responsible company we must look, rather than to dismanting the labour movement.

Passion Play sources

From Mr A. N. Sherwin-White. FBA Sir, Concerning the responsibility for the trial of Christ, Dr Hyam Maccoby and the other apologists of the school of Paul Winter whom he cites (June 12) ignore the technical facts of Roman criminal prosecution. In this there is no public prosecutor, and prosecution de-pends upon the initiative of interested parties—private persons or local big wigs. Without such indeoendent act of accusation there can he no trial. Hence the responsi-bility lies with the presecutor: the Roman governor deals with the Tase presented.

The trial of Christ conforms exactly to normal Roman procedure, with the High Priest acting as delator or principal prosecutor. Hence the responsibility lies not with the Roman governor but with the prosecutors, who were, of course, Jews. Which of the many factions they represent is another question, as Di Maccoby rightly observes, though Acts reveals that the high priests and their council were far from being the mere creatures of the Prefect. But Mark is entirely correct in the statement that "it was on the orders of the Roman governor and on the initiative of the Jewish authorities that Jesus was crucified.

So it would be in any analagous case in Reman provincial jurisdiction. Perhaps I may follow Dr Maccoby's example and cite my own book on Reman law in the New Testament for further enlighten-

The reason for our troubles was, in part that we maintained our transformer operation too long out of a wish to thirds of the cost of this will be met by the parents. A few of my staff (and no doubt a number of parents) regard this educational adjunct as "essential equipment" in an age of high technology. The rest of us regard it as a highly desirable optional extra. Would Mr Newell suggest, therefore, that only those in the second category should contribute towards the cost?

"Do voluntary" thintiflustiffs to cancer research or the British Heart Foundation erode the principle of a "free" National Health Service?

I am not suggesting for one preserve the employment of loyal staff, and in part the pursuit of a development programme in three high-technology fields — semiconductors, avionics and computer systems. It was not realized—and the fault may well have been mine—that the return on these activities—all of which have since proved quite triumphane—was too long-term in relation to the immediately available capital. Banking facilities at the time were constricted. Although the company was not insolvent, it was in a position of considerable difficulty position of considearble difficulty and sought the assistance of the NEB. After long negotiations that body pro-vided assistance in terms which— after various transactions— has left it the owner of 30 per cent of the voting shareholding. Investments by way, of loan from the NEB have been repaid. The company is grateful to the NEB for the belp rendered but, speaking on behalf of the board and of its work people, it is the burning and passionate desire of the company to remain independent. This wish has already been publicly stated on behalf of the company by its senior executives company by its sculor executives and is wholly endorsed throughout

On any basis the NEB will make a very substantial profit for the nation out of its shrewd investment. The sum invested was £8.7m, of which £2.7m has already been realsized and at the present market real-sized and at the present market price the return on the balance would be in the region of £58m. In 1974 the company could have sought salvation by selling itself into the ownership of some other corporation. It would, in our view, be wrong and hideously wrong if, having redeemed its fortunes entirely through its own exertions the company should now be sold off to another corporation so as to lose to another corporation so as to lose its independence and unquestionably to impair the quality of resource and initiative that exists throughout the organization.

Civil Service pay

From the Secretary-General of the Council of Civil Service Unions

Sir, Lord Vaizey (June 11) has reached such an alarming conclu-sion, ie, that British civil servants are paid 50 per cent more than their outside counterparts, that most of your readers will probably quite rightly disbelieve him without further thought. After all, we all know that this simply cannot be true, given the political sensitivity of Civil Service pay levels.

For those inclined to believe Lord Vaisary heretowers.

Vaizey, however, may I be allowed to point out the factual errors in his letter which have clearly led him to his wrong conclusion?

First, the particular: there are just over 200 economists in government service at the level which could concern Lord Vaizey. Their pay is related to the generalist prodes (Assistant Secretary and Principal) with whom they work, and with whom they are inter-changeable. Given the current shortages in the Government Economic Service, and its record wastage rate, the market position certainly does not favour Lord Vaizey's allegation that our economists are overpaid. As most of our defections are to husiness and commerce, the Civil Service's market position can hardly be regarded as advantageous. But, scriously overpaid on the basis of an incorrect value-judgment about 200 people?

Turning to the more general issues mentioned by Lord Vaixey:
(a) the average retiring age of civil servants is 64, not 60; (b) civil servants do not have a noncontributory pension scheme— their current contribution of 81 per cent is just about the highest in the country; and (c) civil servants do not have "very long holidays"for the vast majority, their holidays (specifically quantified in our pay settlements) are significantly behind outside comparative occupations. In any case, it is hardly appropriate for an academic to criticize other people's boliday provisions!

Finally, Lord Vaizey asked for access to the information upon which Civil Service pay is based. Can I refer him to the recently published report of the Pay Research Unit board, wherein the relevant information resides? This will show him-and anyone who is credulous enough to believe his essertion—that civil servants' pay a fair reflection of average outside pay, and, at senior levels, is some considerable way helow that average. Image of Dr Obote From Mr D. G. R. Belshaw

Sir. The decunciation by former President Milton Obote of corruption resident Milton Obote of corruption in Uganda (The Times. May 28) will be welcomed by a wide circle of international aid agencies. Over the last nine months the unwillingness of the previous government to institute the policies necessary to overcome smuggling and black market activities has been one of the major obstacles restricting the flow major obstacles restricting the flow of international aid to a level below that required for the effective reconstruction of Uganda's shartered economy. Also, Dr Obote's admission of the error of his earlier policy of nationalizing foreign enterprises will be welcomed in international business circles.

In riew of the obstacle which the hostility of the Baganda people pose for his platform of national unity and reconciliation, Dr Obote might also consider the possibility of past error in the area of regional policy. For example, in 1966 nearly all the development projects identified by the Buganda Planning Commission were excised from the final version of the national fiveyear plan in the weeks immediately after the flight into exile of

Frederick Mutesa. Kabaka of Buganda and President of Uganda. This decision coupled with the retention of the non-progressive and discriminatory export tax on coffee (the major source of income in Buganda) at a time of falling prices fostered a widespread faeling amongst the Baganda of deliberate economic neglect.

Perhaps more important in terms of the political consequences. Dr Obote's decision to abolish the Kabakaship instead of reinstaring it in a constitutional form—towards which reformers within the Buganda Government had been working before the events of 1966—was taken as evidence of social and cultural discrimination. These issues have continued virtually unchanged to the present time. Whether Dr Obore's image will be the a national structural time. that of a national statesman or the depend in large part on his embrac-ing a new strategy for regional economic and social development in Liganda.

Ulster initiative

From the Reverend G. R. Styles, SJ Sir. The people of Northern Ireland are beset by two fears. The large majority of the population fears for its future and for the future of its legitimate institutions if it were to become an Irish minority politically linked to the Irish Republic; and these fears are naturally reinforced by the continuing activities of the IRA and its supporters.

The minority fears for its future and its legitimate aspirations if it remains a minority dominated by Ulster Unionists, whether linked or not linked politically with Britain. These fears are reinforced, rightly or wrongly, by the continuing presence of the British Army and by the past experience of unfair atment under the provincial rule of the majority.

In these circumstances any political initiatives which originate either in London or in Dublin tend to be suspect and tend to increase the fears of one part; or the other rather than to allow them, however good and bonourable the intentions of the authors. The only political initiatives that are likely to reduce fears and to result in any eventual success must surely originate from the political leaders of Northern Ireland thomselves; and it follows that the only sensible activity open to the gov-ernments in both Dublin and London, as well as to Church leaders, must be restricted to encouraging further meetings between the political leaders of Northern Ireland without seeking any politi-cal capital in doing so. No other course is likely to succeed. Yours faithfully. ROBERT STYLES

(June 11) the enthusiastic reception given in Bulgaria to take London Bach Society demonstrates the "absolutely indestructible power of music to override the barriers which man (sic) puts up between the ordinary people of the world"

This seems to me a wildly extra-vagant claim. The barriers referred to are presumably those which tin this instance) separate the British and Bulgarian peoples; they were erected, not by mon in general, but by those particular men who have exercised autocratic power in Bulgaria ever since that unfortunate country became a satellite of the Soviet Union in 1945. They are the same barriers—of ignorance, prejudice, and misunderstanding—which have everywhere been erected be-tween the free and the unfrae peoples of the world, and they can be removed only by the free ex-change, between those disparate peoples, of ideas, opinions, and accurate information.

Such an exchange, if it ever takes place, will of course be conducted place, will of course be conducted through the natural medium of rational thought, which is language; music, even when it employs linguistic aids (as in opera) is unsuited to this purpose. That is why authoritarian regimes have always exer-cised a strict consorship of the written and spoken word, whilst tolerating, and at time encouraging the composition and performance of music: rebellion may originate in a speech or a book, but is unlikely to do so in a symptony or string quartet. We are not surprised to Jeann that music and its near-relation, ballet, are the only arts that flourist in the Soviet Union, as they once flourished in Metternich's Vienna.

And so when Dr Steinitz says that his Bulgarian audience showed by their looks and their talk that they were "entirely with us". I askwith us in what? On matters relatiing to the B Minor Mass, and the performance that had just taken place? That can be taken for granted. But what about those dividing barriers? Did the Bach Society and their Bulgarian hosts discusthem, and reach some form of agreement about their removal? Did the two parties exchange views on such important matters as human rights, freedom of speech, democracy, dictatorship, communism, press censorship, and so forth? 'A common accord on those matters would have been infinitely more valuable than non-controversial comment on an undisputed masterpiece

We know, of course, from the silence of Dr Steinitz on the matter, that such accord was neither achieved nor sought, which was probably just as well. If an Oxford don runs into trouble for discussing Aristotle, in private, behind the iron curtain, who knows what would have happened to Dr. Steinitz if he had ventured on a public discussion of a more modera and controversial writer like Softhenitsin? Which goes to show that the iron curtain will not be removed by the interchange of musicians. At home in the Palace From Mr Roger Musgrave

Sir, It is most encouraging that the wife of the new Archbishop of Canterbury, Mrs Rosalind Runcie, has expressed the hope that Lam-beth Palace may be opened more freely to visitors (erticle, June 5). The historic parts of the Palace are an important part of our heritage, not only for their role in Church history, but for their intrinsic architecrural and artistic interest too. -At present, I understand, the Palace may be visited only by organized groups by prior arrangoment, and the Lambeth Bible viewed only by accredited scholars. Yet Sir Nikolaus Persner writes, in his "Buildings of England" volume for

London:

"Londoners and strangers do not usually appreciate the fact that London possesses in this palace a complex of domestic buildings largely medieval and wholly picturesque which is of such interest and merit that they would flock and merit that they would flock to see it, if only it were not so near their homes . . . The hall remains one of London's most attractive buildings, entirely Gothic in its structure, with . . a magnificent hammerbeam roof."

Obviously there would be formidable problems of security, admini-stration and not least finance to be overcome. However I am sure that numerous people and organications would wish to aid the provision of the necessary facilities. I for one, aithough a non-Anglican, would glidly contribute to a fund for this purpose, and I hope this may encourage many others to help make Mrs Runcie's vision a reality. Yours sincerely.

of its own errors, some of which have been considerable. The LT Executive is accountable for the day-to-day operation of its services and for di-bursements up to £1.5m. General policy and major financial decisions are the statutory responsibility of the GLC, although recent statements and posturings by the Conservative majority on that body, in power since May, 1977, could have given some people a rather different impression. The cause of LT's problems is political, yet so deep-rooted that it transcends mere party differences. The creeping disaster which has brought LT to its present spectacular plight mirrors one of Britain's major weaknesses and thus offers a lesson to the nation as a whole as well as to its congested capital. More on that later. London Transport presents the passenger with a depressing and frustrating picture. Each morning London's local radio stations seem to produce a litary of bus shortages, break-downs on the Underground and major roads blocked by acci-burst water-mains.

The misery of waiting for a bus has probably done more than anything else to increase the proportion of profanity in everyday London English. When it finally arrives, it comes in a convoy as if nervous of travelling alone. All over town you can see buses immobile at the kerb with a seat cushion propped against their sterns, the traditional sign of mechanical failure

You cannot change from one bus to another, still less from s bus to the Underground or vice versa, without buying an-other ticket. The entire undertaking seems be obsessed with cash. Unless you invest in a season ticket or a dauntingly expensive
"Go as you please" pass, you need a pocketful of ridiculously large and heavy coins to comply with this insatiable thirst for ready cash on the part of LT.

Yet it was not always so. Some time ago a reader. Mr Charles Fyffe, drew my attention to the following passage in a book he owns.

" Another advantage . the issue of strip tickets by which frequent users of the rubes can effect a slight economy and save the mouble of booking each time. The tickets are available on nearly all the lines and are issued in the form of a handy roll, in sets of six, one being torn off and delivered at the completion of each journey." The con-temporary public transport user in Amsterdam, Munich or Paris would find nothing remarkable about this while the poor Londoner of today would go on his knees in would go on his knees in gratitude for the opportunity. The passage comes from a guide to London-dated 1909.

which were introduced nearly a decade ago to make his role unnecessary. But, like that of the bus conductor, his continued presence is made necessary by LT's persistence, unlike any other major transport comparable undertaking in countries, with a system of graduated fares. In London you still pay strictly according to the distance you travel. At present one mile or less on a bus costs 10p and one to two miles 20p. Such journeys account for 66 per cent of bus usage, a strong case, it may be thought, for a flat fare of the type already on offer on the highly successful "Red Arrow central routes. Why then are there no flat fares, multiple tickets, automatic ticket-cancelling machines and the like, commonplace from Scandinavia to Spain. The chairman of the LT Executive, Mr Ralph Bennett, was disarmingly frank on the subject in an interview with The Times. "So long as we have graduated fares we have to do it this way. A suitable treatment for some cases

Although I am squeamish by nature, an opportunity to witness the administration of the most controversial form of psychiatric treatment, electro-con-ruisive therapy (ECT), seemed not to be missed. It came at treatment, but so the end of a week spent touring Goodmayes Psychiatric Hospital, near liford, Essex, the rest of which I have described to a very long earlier

There are ECT sessions at with equipment at the 9.30 a.m. on Mondays, Wednes- his bed. A rubber go ments a week for three weeks are normal. While waiting for the anaesthetist to arrive. Dr John Aunaraduam, a registrar originally from Sri Lanka, gave me some background. From what he could gather, he said, mental hospitals in earlier years, particularly in the late 1950s. Attitudes had become more critical in the 1960s, and ECT was now used less at ECT was now used less at Goodmayes than at some other

It was almost the treatment of choice for certain forms of depression, but was scarcely ever used for schizophrenis. Although no one yet knew precisely how it worked, the theory was that in acute depression there was a depletion of some brain amines (part of the chemistry of the brain), and that electrical stimulus in-

When patients were in a severe depressive stupor, had stopped sating and drinking, were very suicidal and not communicating, it could be very beneficial.

Dr Bevis Gordon, one of the consultants, looking in briefly, said: "It's a crude form of treatment. Basically it's the same as giving someone an epi-leptic fir. It used to be much more dramatic before muscle relaxants were used", he said. Then Dr Michael Lauchlan, the anaestherist, who is also a GP at Harold Wood, arrived; a genial, rather bracing man. "I have done 70 a week in the sixties", he said briskly. "It has gone down a good deal since the anti-depressant drugs came in." (In fact, last year 70 courses of treatment were given to inpatients; 15 to day and outpatients.) "But the drugs can have some very unpleasant side effects: dryness of the mouth, constipation, some unsteadiness and difficulties in focussing.

"After ECT, the main complaint is loss of memory, which can last two to three weeks. It varies a lot. Some outparients ab back to work the same day. Others are very confused. Some improve quite dramatically."

As we moved towards the cubicles in which that morning's four parients were waiting. Dr Lauchian explained that a short-acting barbiturate (Brietal Sodium) was first administered by injection to induce uncon-sciousness. This was followed by a muscle relaxant called Scoline.

The first patient was a prematurely aged man of 50, very thin. Normally patients sign a form giving their consent to treatment. They can be treated against their will under Section 26 of the 1959 Mental Health Act if one consultant and one GP agree. At Goodmayes, two consultants have to agree, after less courageous as a military correspondent and publicist than as a commander on the battlefield. Among his colleagues, his visits to the frontline, whether in Vietnam or in the Middle East, became something of a legend. He never gave more consideration to his own safety than did the fighting troops on whose actions and problems he was reporting. His articles were fully cognisant of the fact that war is a continuation of politics by other means, and his critical analysis of any given situation simed at preventing a crisis from ending on a field of battle. Hence his well-rea-soned advocacy of psycho-logical warfare as the more intelligent progress towards a solution, i.e. that reason solution, should win.

Among Brigadier Thompson's less-publicized activities was his concern for the fate of people in Communist and Soviet-overrun countries. In order to give it expression, he became a member of the Committee for the Imprisoned Writers' Day, of the Free Czechoslovakia Campaign after the 1968 Soviet Aggression, and lately, a Sponsor of the Committee for the Unjustly Prosecuted Dissideuts behind the Iron Curtain. He deffered in this from some of his professional colleagues, for he never shirked the role of a campaigner.

All these qualities came to the fore in his Chairmanship and eventual Presidency of the Military Commentators' Circle, when his presence will be sadly missed, for his personal experience so greatly enriched the Circle's programme of lec-with an excellent selection of plants, including a wide collection of hebes in shades of purple and white, and an interesting example of Crevillea rosmariniolia 'Can berta Gem', red, brush-like flowers. Round the small pools are moisture-loving plants such as Mimulus 'Whitecroft Scarlet' and Myosotis forsteri.

An outstanding floral arrangement display by the National Association of Flower Arrangement Societies (NAFAS) also won a gold medal for its interpretation of the theme. "The Good Earth". It is an exhibit beginning with field plant material, progressing over the stile ano the garden with vegetables, and then to the more exotic fruits and flowers of the earth. It is beantifully arranged. Gold medals to the Lindley range have been awarded to Alan C. Smith, Keston, for another of his impeccable displays of sempertiums and jovibarbas, also to the RHS Lily Group for its educactional and fascinating exhibit of alliums from Europe, north-west America, the Middle East, Asia and Ceotral Asia.

Other noteworthy exhibits include a stand of startlingly perfunded shrub and old garden roses, several of miniature pelargoniums and geraniums, a number of (uchsia displays, a good array of

The result is best illustrated by the action of a building regulations expert in his cottage in Hertford. Were he to install a full regulation staircase, it would take upmost of his front room. By some strange oversight, the Government has not yet got round to regulating ladders: so this man and his family retain their drawing room and use a ladder to go upstairs and use a ladder to go upstairs

The regulations affecting build-ing are constantly amended and expanded. Architects are obliged to be fully conversant with requlations now in force, no matter how novel or unreasonable. As a result, the profession is under great pressure to keep up to date, and is not always successful. The building professionals in the health service, some 3,000 of them, have devised a scheme to tackle the issue. Health buildings are particularly complicated to de-sign combining as they do the functions of public access, resi-dential accommodation, laundry

Work on a £150m contract to build over 400 rail cars for Hongkoog's railway is threaten-ed by an electricians' strike at

Doulton waits for vital new Fairey forecast of profits

By Philip Robinson

The crucial new profits fore-cast from Fairey Holdings, on which Doulton agreed to pay the National Emergrise Board £24en for the once lame duck company, should be known by Doubton, part of the S. Pearson group, won the NEB's saiction of Fairey early in May, beating the consortium headed by Hambros Bank, which had offered £20.5m for the nuclear and assessments.

But two weeks ago, Doulton asked Morgan Grenfell, merchant backers, to examine the forecast on which its successful bid was made. Fairey was forecasting profits of £5.5m for this year against £5.1m last time and £5.2m the previous year.

It is now thought likely that this forecast could be revised downwards, which would effectively lower the price Doulton would have to pay, unless the NES decided to put Fairey back on the market.

The Fairey Board meet tomorrow to reasses what they believe shey can make this year. It is likely their conclu-sion will be passed to the NEB on Friday who, as sellers of the company, will then inform morning, then "the board expects to adjourn its meeting to a time and place when it can take final action on the Chrysler request for guarantees", the Treasury said.

The banks which have not yet approved the plans account for about $20m of the company's debt. For Fairey, the Doulton deal is regarded as crucial for stability following the insettlement created by the way the NEB offered it for sale. Fairey, steered from near collapse to £5m profits by Mr Angus Murray, was bought by the NEB from the receiver two a firm bid on the table worth $20.5m. This was the offer the NES matched against Doulton's, apparantly leaving aside the possibility that Hambros could have put up a package worth £23m.

Mr Christopher Sporborg of Hambros said at the time of the Doubton deal: "For the sake of a premium of under 5 per cent, it strikes me as sad that the NEB did not consider it reasonable to give us a chance,

But the NEB, conscious of the taxpayers' interests, took the higher offer. However, once the deal was made, Fairey decided to support it and now wants to commune and become part of the Pearson group with Bookson.

attack on housing moratorium

By John Huxley Construction industry leaders are seeking an urgent meeting with the Prime Minister on the Government's proposal to indpose a moratorium on local pose a moratorium on locas authority building. In a letter to Mrs Thatcher they said the moratorium would be "pro-foundly demaging"; it would have the gravest consequences for an industry alreody facing a sharp decline in workload.

The moratorium threat has united industry leaders who meet in the Group of Eight.

The only note of dissent came from Mr Les Wood, came from Mr Les Wood, general secretary of the Union of Construction, Allied Trades and Technicians. Yesterday, he reiterated that the group should not just concern itself with workload

He said that unless the group showed its willingness to do this over the next faw weeks he would be forced to recommend to his executive committee that the union with-

In 1979, the total consumption of electric power in Belgium attained 45,250GWh, a 6.1% increase over the previous year. Sales of electricity by the company and the intercommunal utilities which it manages totalled 16,285GWh, an increase of 9.7%. HV power sales were up by 9.9% and those of LV power were up by 9.1%. During 1979, the Company's production, rransmission and distribution facilities in the fields electricity, gas and cable-television allowed to satisfy users demand at any time. The nuclear units at Chooz, Doel and Tihange, in which the Company has a holding, like during the previous year supplied a considerable portion of all generated energy.

In 1980, the Company will celebrate the 75th anniversary of its foundation. Indeed the "Société d'Electricité de l'Escaut" was created on 8 August, 1905, and it gradually expanded its operations into the province of Antwerp. In 1956, following mergers with other companies, its name was changed into réunies d'Energie du Bassin de l'Escaut-EBES", the name which it still carries today.

In order to secure at national level a uniform management of the nuclear generating facilities and to better spread the contingencies of such operations, the EBES, INTERCOM and UNERG utilities in 1979 formed a joint ownership of units 3 and 4 of the Doel nuclear power plant and of units 2 and 3 of the Tihange nuclear power plant. Management of units 3 and 4 of Doel is provided by EBES and units 2 and 3 of Tihange are managed by INTERCOM. EBES also holds a 35% share in the three 180MW sets making up the 2nd unit of the Coo-Trois Ponts pumped storage power station which will be commissioned in 1980.

The total capital investment for 1979 amounts to BF13,203 million. This amount comprises a share of BF1,037 million in the construction of the nuclear units of the Electricité de France power plant at Tricastin and BF9,267 million for other generating facilities, BF840 million for interconnection and transmission equipment and BF2,059 million mainly for distribution

The financial results for 1979 permitted payment of an unchanged dividend of BF177 per share, but paid on a larger number of shares which, following the new issue of shares in 1978, increased from 11,070,000 to 13,300,000.

Post Office starts high-speed service linking London and Toronto

Britain in first with electronic mail service available to the public was launched by the Post Office yesterday. The service, which enables facsimile copies to be transmitted at speed across great distances, is operating only between London and Toronto to start with, but links to other centres in Britain and abroad should be established by the end. The Post Office regards the service, Intelpost, as complementary to the traditional postal operation, but many postmen are apprehensive that electronic mail will jeopardize their employment. They see it as a much greater threat than telex or telegrams since it produces an exact replica of the original document and therefore has a wider variety of uses.

A confidential survey commissioned by the Union of Post Office Workers is believed to have forecast a loss of 40,000 jobs during the next 10 years, or double the Post Office's own internal projections, as a result of new technology. The job losses are seen as occurring mainly on the postal side as electronics replace manual handling, sorting and despatch methods, and assume a steep drop in the use of traditional mail services.

Post Office management's view is that the new service will prevent loss of business from for instance, commercial customers who might otherwise set up their own private internal facsimile transmission systems. A number of these are already in use.

Intelpost is expensive compared with conventional post. It costs £4 to send an A4-sized message to Toronto from London as against 15 or 20p (depending on weight) by traditional methods. But the relative price is expected to fall as more equipment comes into use and the volume of usage rises. The main advantage is its speed; it can take only a few hours instead of three or four days for a facsimile message to arrive at the Canadian post office where it can be either collected by the recipient or delivered by postmen. A Canadian businessman who has been taking part in trials for the past month said that it was of enormous benefit to him to be able to speed up the trans-mission of letters of credit and guaran-tee documents. The trials have also resulted in interest from such organizations as fashion houses, the exchange, engineers and lawyers.

Intelpost ARoyal Mail service

Toronto to London in two minutes by Intelpost.

It is not clear how widely used the system will be ultimately. Mr Nigel Walmsley, the Post Office's director of postal marketing, said yesterday that the volume was expected to be only a few hundred a week during the first few months, but rising considerably as more centres were linked in.

Intelpost is expected to operate to the Netherlands by the end of the year and discussions are also at an advanced stage with the Hongkong and United States postal authorities. There are also plans to introduce a facsimile service within the United Kingdom and the first such link, between London and Belfast should be operating by the end of 1980 with other cities to be added next year.

At present the system serves only London postal regions and has only one transmission centre, at the Stock Exchange Post Office in Throgmorton Street, but messages can also be handed in at the Trafalgar Square Post Office and at the South Western District Post Office, where they will be forwarded by hand to the transmission centre.

Eventually, if costs fall sufficiently, it should be possible for letters to be sent electronically to any main post office from which they could then be delivered

Like its counterparts in other coun tries, the Post Office has been experimenting with electronic mail for some years. The original inaugural link had been planned to start nine months ago with the United States but changes in American regulations prevented this.

Despite the delay, the British service is the first of its kind. In an inaugural message to the Canadian Postmaster General, Mr Ron Dearing, the Post Office's chairman-designate, pointed out that "we are today beginning the first international public facsimile service in the world, and in so doing are demonstrating the way in which the postal service ing the way in which the postal service can use the latest technology to create swift, definitive communication between businesses and private individuals from one nation to another".

Prospects for Talbot's car jobs depend largely on August sales lob prospects in the Talbot car company will depend on a review later this summer, Mr George Turrbull, chairman, said in London yesterday.

He was speaking to the Guild of Motor Writers three days before 1,400 more men are to be made redundant at the company's plant in Linwood, near Glasgow, after Taibot shed 4,000 jobs last year.

Turnbull said much depended on the company's performance in August when the new registration numbers were introduced.

EEC move

Important new attempts by the European Commission to institute concerted action by EEC member governments on waste recycling were announced in London yesterday.

M Michel Carpentier, head of the Commission's environmental service, said that two draft recommendations were now before the Commission, encouraging member states to define and implement policies promo-ting the use of recycled paper and board and glass containers.

The proposed directives could result in national administrations and public bodies being obliged to make greater use of recycled paper and call for a re-examination of product specifications which restrict the use of recycled paper.

consideration to be given to its compulsory use by local authorities for office stationery and for toilet and other hygiene papers to be made from recovered waste paper.

M Carpentier was speaking at the opening of a European con-ference on waste management, the first event of its kind to be staged in the United King-dom. He said: "Every bottle, every scrap of paper recycled represents energy saved, a represents energy saved, a natural resource conserved and pollution avoided.

"However, policies designed to achieve successful waste management along these lines. as the meeting of heads of government in Luxembourg last mouth emphasized, can only achieve their object in the context of coordinated approach among the Nine."

EEC countries consume about 30 million tonnes a year of paper and board, but less than half of the raw material for its production originates in the Community. Nine million tonnes comes from recycled fibre, a cent.

The draft recommendation says that of the 25 million tonnes of paper that could be recovered each year in the EEC, only 10 million tonnes is being collected.

On the glass recycling front, the Commission is urging that countries introduce, maintain and develop systems of distribution for returnable bottles.

Tax on 'excess income'

From the Deputy Director, the Engineering Employers

Sir. Lady Wootton (June 11) gives us a highly condensed sketch of a scheme for a new kind of incomes policy about which, she says, she has been pondering for some time. I do hope that, in the nation's interest, she will spare herself the trouble of giving it further consideration. Her new incomes policy would not merely limit pay and dividend increases, but would be tacked on to our existing tax-system by adding to the present scales and allowances an "excess income charge" pay-able on any excess of the taxpayer's gross income over the corresponding figure for the previous year. This "excess income charge" could be graduated in favour of small incomes and have certain exemptions and allowances affecting only employed persons—these latter being all "written into the law". Parliament having fixed the rates and rules, the system would then "be operated by an existing public service of great efficiency ", (sic).

There is no possibility of such a system working or doing any good. Even in a country where the ostensible worth of large numbers of individuals is determined by the results of remote collective bargaining, the fact remains that the true

This truth nourishes ambition, effort, enterprise and mobility effort, enterprise and mobility among employees; and these qualities need to be stimulated for their own sake—rather than be treated, presumably, as suitable cases for tax "exemption and allowance" under -new incomes policy law. All that would flourish under such a law would be a "black" employment market and an encouragement for the brighter people to ment for the brighter people to leave these shores.

The great majority of people in this country are certainly alarmed by inflation and unemployment. But they are per-haps even more sick of being regarded as members of some kind of universal corporate body and unfit to reap the benefit of their individual ambiconditions permitted by the state. An incomes policy law of the kind proposed by Lady Wootton would earn Parliament which imposed it, and the Civil Service which administered it, nothing but hatred and

Although equities took a well-carned breather pesterday after their precipitous rise of the post two weeks, institutional appetite for leading shares was underlined by the speed and ease with which the 7 per cent stake in Pilkington held by BSN-Gervais-Danone following the Fluchgals deal last year was placed for a total of £25m. Indeed stockbrokers Cazenove and Rowe & Pitman appear to have carried out a remarkably smooth operation for the French group given that the placing price of around 215p was only a 6 per cent discount on the overnight price of 228p, which had managed a jump of a tenth the day before, around twice the rise of other blue chips.

Meanwhile the strong demand for the Pilkington placing coupled with the way the property sector has taken the £108m Land Securities rights issue in its stride may encourage other groups outside second line oil shares to book a place in the rights issue queue, although this time round companies will have to put up a good case other than tiding them over working capital problems.

One further point worth making is that after all the brouhaha about dawn raids placines like Pilkington's are in reality nothing more than a mirror image of such

International banking

Where have all the horrowers gone?

The Bank for International Settlements last week added a warning of its own to those increasingly frequently heard from commercial bankers over the difficulties faced by the international banking system in recycling the vestly enlarged Opec surpluses.

Lending bankers might be forgiven a wry smile. The ironic fact is they have rarely been under less pressure than during the first half of this year. While the deposits of the oil exporters have flowed in, the borrowers have remained determinedly out of

Up until the end of May, according to Morgan Guaranty Trust, the total of new Eurocurrency credits totalled $24,380m, po less than $6,000m down on the comparable five months of 1979. Non-oil developing countries had borrowed barely 10 per cent of their projected $70,000m 1980 current account deficit.

It is the borrowers rather than the lenders who have been reluctant to come forward. Earlier this year the expectation was that as demand for funds rose, so too would the margins of the lending banks. This has signally failed to happen. If anything, the evidence of the past week or two is that the competitive pressure to lend is still sufficiently fierce to have obliterated most of the tentative movements towards higher margins, Eorrowers as diverse as Sweden. Argentina, Italy and Thailand are all raising funds on more competitive terms than on previous deals. The reason for the lending lag is not altogether clear. When dollar rates were around 20 per cent there was a strong disincentive to borrow and reserves, in many cases, were sufficiently high in late 1979 to facilitate a borrowing delay. But it cannot last for long. One or two countries known to have a big pending borrowing requirement are already having to concede more generous terms-Brazil is an instance-and increasingly others are expected to follow. The floodgates could well open in the second half of this year.

For the time being, however, banks are highly liquid and probably underlent. As recession gathers pace in domestic markets their desire to lend internationally will grow. The lender's market has not yet they will be ready for a more arrived.

Ferranti fights for its independence

Anyone doubting the role of the house newspaper as a force in the dissemination of cor-porate information could do no better than scan some of the recent issues of Ferranti News.

Ever since the Government instructed the National Enterprise Board to dispose of its investment portfolio, the journal has become a vital forum for both management and shop floor workers to express their views. Its role has become even more pronounced since the NEB formally announced on the eve of the spring bank holiday last month that it intended to dispose of its 50 per cent interest in the electronics and electrical group as soon as practicable after the company's 1979 results were company's managing director, observed, with remarkable understatement, in the latest issue, "The NEB and its investments have always been a political issue". Today the controversial plan to sell off the NEB stake moves firmly into the political arena when MPs debate the issues which it raises. It was inevitable that the disposal of the Ferranti stake would be controversial, not least because it will complete the trio of major disposals (the others being interests in Fairey and ICL) made by the NEB under its obligations to the Government. It also happens to rank as a success story—a bull point which management. workers and opposition MPs, with different shades of emphasis, have underlined as the campaign to ensure Ferrantis independence has gathered momentum.

For in the five years since Ferranti was saved from collapse by £15m of new capital from the taxpayer, the com-pany's profits and performance have improved beyond all re-cognition. When Mr Sebastian de Ferranti, the chairman, and chairman, who with family interests control 20 per cent of the company's equity. Right: Sir Arthur Knight, chairman of the National Enterprise Board, which has yet to decide how the disposal of its stake will take place.

his brother Basil, deputy chairman (with family interests they still control 20 per cent of the company's equity), opened discussions with Mr Wedgwood Benn in the summer of 1974, Ferranti was in dire financial straits. Heavy research and development spending and a pre-octupation with technological excellence, which had become Ferranto hallmark, had been accomplished with little more than a passing regard for financial profitability.

With Mr Alun Jones installed as managing director and the rescue formalized in May, 1975. Ferranti reestablished itself forcefully in the electronics and electrical sector. Reorganization coupled with disposal of less profitable engineering activi-ties, and rationalization into five main operating divisions have helped Ferranti to emerge leaner, more competitive and profitable.

Last year pre-tax profits were 19.9m; the City expects the results to be published early foreign buyer.

next week to show an improve-ment to about £11m; and, pro-viding the company can remain free of industrial relations free of industrial relations troubles, pre-tax profits in the present financial year could top £13m.

Ferranti has become the jewel of the NEB's rather tarnished crown.

The company depends heavily defence spending—about thirds of its worldwide sales are in his area and nearly half of that is to the Ministry of Defence (to which its Scot-tish group in heavily oriented). That bias would appear effec-tively to rule out a bid from a

The heart of the controversy over the sale of the NEB stake is not so much the principle (although Labour MPs would disagree) as the method.

Management and workers have achieved, as the casual reader of Ferranti Neus will discover, a remarkable degree of unanimity about this,

The attractions of the company to corporate predators are considerable. It enjoys a technological lead in a range of essential defence areas and projected sales growth for several years ahead is specially encouraging, not least, because of the equipment the company will be supplying for the Tornado aircraft programme.

The company depands beautiful and the states and cash wish CVC in the shares and cash rich GEC is regarded as the most likely bidder. A GEC bid would not only create uncertainty; it would almost certainly involve delay. Ferranti and GEC compete in a significant number of areas and not only would Ferranti's aspirations to continued independence be undermined, but the spectre of rationalization and redundancies would loom large. There would be defence considerations: the two companies and their subsidiaries compete and the views of the Defence Ministry would have to

There would also appear too be prima facie grounds for a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in the event of a GEC takeover attempt. That would further add to the uncertainty at a critical time in Ferranti's development.

The Ferranti management has vigorously lobbied in support of the flotation route, apparently believing that Sir Arthur Knight, the chairman of the NEB, and his colleagues have already made up their minds to follow the alternative course in response to govern-ment pressure.

But the campaign waged by Ferranti has angered Sir Arthur, who has let it be known than the board has not decided what course to follow and will not do so until it has received the Ferranti results next week.

The NEB board finds itself in an unenviable position over the Ferranti disposal because it is required to take account of both the raxpayers' interests, and the interests of the company in selling off its investments.

Proceeds from the Sale of the Ferranti stake will count towards the board's contribution to reducing the public sector borrowing requirement. But should a short-term political requirement assume a greater requirement assume a greater importance than the best long-term interests and health of an efficient, internationally competitive company, which forms a vital part of a sector of British industry not afflicted by the plague of deindustrialization?

In today's debate Ferranti managers and workers will be listening carefully to ministerial speeches to see what impact, if any, their campaign has had.

Bringing order into the world's commodity markets

Thinking forward in the midst of war to a better order of things, the economist John Maynard Keynes set out, in a memorandum to the Treasury written in 1942, ideas which three decades later were to be closely examined by the "think tank" of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (Unctad).

The outcome was Unctad's proposals for an integrated programme on commodities (IPC), including a common fund for financing buffer stocks. The IPC proposal was formally adopted in May, 1976, at the IV conference Nairobi. Some 25 countries, five of them in the developed "murket economy" category, said they would support it financially.

That was the start of the long and - for some Third World nations - frustrating negotiation now moving towards a close at the sixth full session of 103 countries committed to, or interested in, the scheme

The negotiation on the fundthat is for actually putting the programme itself into operation in anything like the form originally envisaged — depends on the ancillary negotiations on individual commodity agreemenu.

So far, the only one that appears to be a willing candidat: for immediate inclusion in the programme is that for rub-ber, on which a full-scale stabilization agreement was reached. Unctad auspices, in October last year.

Another possible candidate is sugar, for which a five-year agreement was renegotiated under Unctad in 1977. Negotiations on the other 16 commodi-ties, of which the 10 most essen-tial are on a "core" list, are in smounts of 51m from all mem-tial are on a "core" list, are in smounts of 51m from all mem-tion, an arrangement on which various stages, and all moving

Copper has proved to be the most contentious with so far no fewer than 17 preparatory meetings. Negotiarions on a sixth tin agreement, to replace the one expiring in July next year, broke down last month mainly because of differences over the size of the buffer stock and the principle on which export controls are to be operated. After 10 meetings, the "negotiating stage" has been reached on

Nobody any longer sees the integrated programme as a panacea for problems in world commodity trade, but it will have an important role to play in curbing extreme price and supply fluctuations.

Agreement on the fund's basic elements was in fact reached in March last year, subsequent negotiations having been directed to details of its operating charter

It has two specific functions, inanced through separate windows?. The first is building up international buffer stocks in cooperation with the international commodity agree ments (ICA's), finance coming in part from the pooled resources of the agreements.

In return for placing with the one-third of their maximum figurcial requirements for stocking, they will receive borrowing rights sufficient to cover their total stocking needs. In addition, fund members will make direct contributions to the first widow, totalling $400m ($150m in cash, $150m on call and the remainder " cal bers plus assessments based on a variant of the United Nations sliding scale.

From this total at least $70m will be voluntarily contributed to the second "window" for which the overall target is $350m. The money from it will be used to finance measures for improving productivity by research and development markering and, where advisable, In the event, because of the protracted process in achievments, this second "window looks like being open for business before the first one. In the final phase of negotiations, much timé been occupied with arguments on whether funds from one ICA can be freely used to support another. While the Group of 77 (the Third World nations), who have sometimes had ex-treme difficulty in reaching a common position, have wanted this facility to be automatic and total, the Americans and the European Community have held out for selectivity.

The organization and phasing of direct contributions have also been dificult to agree on, tion, an arrangement on which the Latin American countries, because of high domestic inflation, are unenthugiastic. Also voting majorities for special decisions have—naturally—been a crucial issue, the "B" group of western industrialized countries seeking to retain the decisive word.

Voting rights as now assigned are 47 per cent for the Group of 77, 42 per cent for the "B" group of western industriplized nations, 8 per cent for the " D' group of communist countries and 3 per cent for China. While this is the first time that the developing nations have been thus assessed for veres in an international arrangement, fin-75 per cent majority and some ancial decisions will require a others two thirds. D countries are ocmplaining that their B per cent is unduly low, set against their 17, per cent financing obligation.

'A decision has still to taken about the extent to which borrowing in international mar-kets will be resorted to for the second window and on whether any earnings on first-window operations should be allocated to the resources of the second. Because of its position as a trading entity, the European Economic Community feels it should be a member of the fund, but without any additional vote, as is alread ythe case in negotiations in tin and coca---secret consultations are now in progress o nthe latter, simed at unblocking the price issue that remained outstanding when the third session of the conference ended in November.

Manile and Amsterdam have both mode hide for the organization's headquarters. London, because of its commodity markets, is favoured by some.

The South East Asian nations, as producers of major commodi-ties that can be stocked, bave in fact been keen on the United concept from the outset, their attitude in marked contrast to the often lukewarm arritude of the Latin Americans. The African councries with soft commodities, have had their eye mainly on potential that could come to them through the second window.

If the separate commodity negotiations now look like ob-structing more rapid realization of the intetrated programme, Mr Gumani Corea, the Unctad secretary general, is confident as ever that agreement on the common fund will quickly prove to be the vital catalyst.

GEI International, the Bedfordshire-based specialist engineering group, managed to raise profits by 11 per cent during the year, in line with expectations, but the results were boosted by a first-time contribution from Sanderson Kayser.

Pre-tax profits rose from £6.16m to £6.82m while turnover advanced by 26 per cent to 564.9m in the year to March 31. Sanderson, the Sheffield-based special steel and engincering group, which was ac-quired in September 1979 for 14.99m in cash and shares, chipped in 11m during the seven months it contributed to GEI. This compares with £830,000 profits for the previous full year. Its 1980 profits were influenced by exchange gains of 5226,000 which may not recur. About 75 per cent of Sander-

The group also continued to place strong emphasis on its cash belances, which were 57.7m, including 51.8m worth of government securities, com-pared with 55.7m last year. Mr Kenny said that the money may be used for further acquisitions. GEI's results would have been better by about £750,000 had it not been for the engineering and steel strikes, although it stressed that it was hard to measure the effect of the disruptions.

The final dividend has been increased from 4.65p gross to 5.07p, making a 15 per cent increase for the year at 7.59p.

N.B. At a meeting of the Board of Directors today it was resolved that an interim dividend of 2.25p (1979-2.25p) be paid on 8th August, 1980, in respect of the year to 30th November, 1930, to shareholders on the register as at 10th July, 1930. The administration and interest charge of £255,715 includes some of the non-recurring expenses incurred upon the acquisition of Capital For Industry Limited.

Property and Reversionary Inrestment Corporation increased profits by nearly 50 per cent in the year to March 31 and a 12 per cent increase in the final dividend leaves the year's total dividend up by 23 per cent to

Group pretax profits rose from £1.26m to £1.88m, of which tax takes £903,000 compared with £561,000 in 1978-79. An extraordinary credit of £3.1m largely reflects the profit on disposal of the 18.2 per cent holding in Property Holding and Investment Trust.

Property and Reversionary says that the investment of the proceeds from the sale of the company's holding in Property Holding and Investment Trust has produced an abnormal in-crease in profits even excluding the interest due after March 31. Freehold and leasehold propcrities have been revalued, showing a 19 per cent increase to £40.4m. The group expects net pretax income from rents during the current year to rise by about a renth by about a tenth.

Undergoing a painful cure

Management upheavals, stock write-offs and redundancies form the background to the heavy losses and slashed dividend announced yesterday by Peter Brotherhood.

The company made pre-tax losses of £885,000 compared with a profit of £12,000 the year before, and the gross dividend was cut from 9.21p to 1.43p.

The shares, however, rose 6p to 71p.

indicating that Brotherhood—one of the established names of British engineeirng—has more going for it than many in the sector. The problems are still formidable. Brotherhood has suffered both from high interest rates—interest charges rose last year from £275,000 to £482,000—and from a strong currency. Traditionally 60 per cent of its sales have gone abroad. Brotherhood also serves have gone abroads as the sales have gone abroads. markets such as the petrochemical and synthetic fibre industries , which are very depressed. In contrast to many companies, however, there is every sign that Brotherhood has both recognized its problems and is striving to solve The most significant event for Brotherhood in 1979-39 was the appointment of Mr Geoffrey Crawford managing director last October. He came from outside with a background in Johnson & Firth Brown and Hall Engineering and something of a reputation for turning companies round.

Brotherhood's profits had been waning since the peak year of 1976-77 when it made $1.68m, but it still had a fine reputation for its marine turbines and compressors

So Mr Crawford adopted a two-prouged strack. First he aimed to slice annual overheads by £500,000. Staff redundancies of about 70, but no cuts in the skilled labour force, accounted for half of this. The rest came from small savings such as abolishing the directors' dining room. The fruits began to show through in the second half of 1979-80 when trading profits before redundancy costs of £133,000 recovered to £268,000.

My Crawford also concentrated on going out

Mr Crawford also concentrated on going out and getting orders. The chairman, Mr William Gardner, who left in April, had also been crief executive and sales director.

Brotherhood still has to cope with the depressed demand for compressors and lack of activity in the metashaminal industry. It of activity in the petrochemical industry. It is also without a chairman. But even in the present climate Mr Crawford is confident of a return to profits in 1980-81.

Firmer prices in areas of natural beauty

Among the most important factors affecting the price of a property, apart from its own particular setting, is the general area in which it is located, a point to be noted by would-be buyers not committed to any particular area.

National Parks, Conservation areas, and so on, are so designnated basically for the beauty of the countryside or the picturesqueness or architectural interest of the area concerned. Not surprisingly, property prices in these areas are firmer than in more ordinary locations, whatever may be the general state of the market.

The point made, there remains much to be said for such areas. One well placed property is Halsgrove Farm, at Withypool, some two miles from Minehead. west Somerset which is within the Exmoor National Park. It is being sold by Mr Bobbie Pollak, joint master of the Exmoor Fox-

The property is a small estate of some 73 acres and the house, basically an older property, was entirely reconstructed and enlarged about seven years ago. It has three main reception rooms, five bedrooms and a dressing room. There is also a threebedroomed staff cottage as well as a good stable yard and six loose boxes.

The sale also includes common grazing rights on Withypool Common and over 1,100 yards of single bank fishing in the Pennycombe Brook. It is expected to make about £170,000 and the agents are Lane Fox and Partners, London, and Keith Falcon, Withypool.

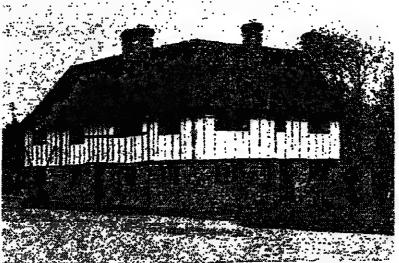

Another well placed property is Haroldston House, near Haverfordwest, Dyfed, and close to the coastline of the Pembrokeshire National Park. The house is pre-dominantly Georgian with later additions and has a grade two listing as being of special architechtural ord historic interest.

Accommodation includes two main reception rooms, another room used as an office, a Victorian conservatory with arched windows, and five bedrooms and a dressing room. Near the house is an original stone-built coach house with stables and a modern extension forming a pottery shop, with all facilities.

The price is in the region of £60,000 with about three quarters of an acre, but a further eight acres of grazing could be rented. In addition, there is a small cottage with a living room and bathroom, which a buyer could acquire for about £15,000. The agents are Knight Frank and Rutley, Hereford.

In a different kind of situation altogether is Street House, No 22 The Street, in the ancient village of Old Basing, near Basingstoke, Hampshire. The house is within the village conservation area with a number of other fine old buildings of varying age and character. Street House is a restored detached seventeenth-century house, brick built, under a tiled roof, which has good ceiling heights for its period. There are a split-level drawing room and study area some 24ft long, a separate dining room, a large kitchen and breakfast room, and a sun room 24ft long with a flag-stone floor. Upstairs, there are four bedrooms. There is a fair-sized garden which contains a swimming pool. The property is for sale at £85.000 through Pearsons, Basingstoke.

Stelling House, near Canterbury, Kent, a grade two listed building for sale at about £120,000.

An unusually attractive looking house is Stelling House, near Canterbury, Kent. It is thought to have been built originally about 1570. In about 1950 it was extensively rebuilt, using much of the original materials and, in fact, has a grade two listing. Construction is timber framed with a brick faced ground floor, and bedrooms, plus a further attic bedroom or playroom. Gardens and grounds extend to just over 1! acres and include a large renovated barn for garaging and storage. Strutt and Parker, Canterbury, are looking for offers in Burpham Court House, also grade two, near Guildford, Surrey. The house dates from the seventeenth century and is of WHEREESE WOULD YOU TOAMANOR FOUSE?

Our readers are always on the move (They spend more on property than the readers of any other national daily newspaper).

And as fast as they're moving into one place they're moving out of another.

Which explains why there are so many flats for sale in the Classified section of The Times. Garden flats, penthouse flats, maisonetics, pieds-a-terre. They're there every day.

One on top of another.

But, of course, it's not only the flathunters who turn to our Classified columns.

We also publish separate sections for Houses, Holidays, Appointments (Senior and Secretarial), Rentals, Motor Vehicles, Announcements and even a For Sale column that sells literally anything and

Only the best lèmporaries meet our permanent standards

In the past few weeks, we've been writing about the stand we are taking to assert Margery Burst's long-established standards for night calibre executive secretaries and P.A.'s.

Although jobs where high stan-dards of performance are needed and appreciated (old fashioned shortband/typing speeds, com-bined with genuine responsibility and discretion) may be increas-ingly few and far between, many of our client companies still be-lieve in our standards—and they come back to us, again and again. So far, we've written about permanent appointments, mainy be-cause the special people to whom we're addressing our ads often be-lieve that temping is a waste of everything they've ever learned.

But that's not strictly true.

In fact, because of that belief, many employers who share our high standards often find the ary secretary very hard to come by. We inevitably have more tem-porary bookings than we have people. It's a pity, because if you have all the skills and qualifications for a top permanent position but haven't yet found your perfect opening, you could well find our temporary opportunities particularly interesting. We hope that, rather than settle for permanent second best, you will let us find a first rate temporary position for

The rates and rewards are outstandingly high: they need to be, for we'll only deal with outstanding people.

So, if you're filling in before the big job comes up—or if you've got the experience for a senior job but not the time—wily not ring Merry Waxman at our Davies Street office to fix a date for a meeting?

International Project Management c£6000-11C2

The problems involved in the organisa-tion of agricultural projects in such diverse locations as the Caribbean and South America create considerable pressure for the Managing Director. For-tunately are appreciates that these pres-sures can be reduced by the proper use of a secretary, whose own high profes sional standards (based on 'A' level education and formal secretarial training) allows the routine work to be handled quickly and more attention paid to the genune role of the secretary as an organiser and confidant. Age is likely to be around thirty, but poise, initiative and previous experience in an international operation are much more important. Please ring us to fix a meeting.

"Falcon took off with the Times"

This is the sentiment expressed by John Raye and John Boyle, co-d :

"Since our old companies. Crawford Perry Travel Ltd. and Chance Ltd., merged in the autumn of 1979 to form the Falcon Leisure Group new company has certainly "taken off", thanks to the power of the columns of The Times.

As individual companies, we have used the power of the classified over 10 years and can resulty to the unique ability of The Times to attract reaction, whether we're talking about special holiday flight offers, ski weekend breaks, summer sun in Greece or even yachting holidays a

" It is not overstating the case to say that without The Times, the n Group would not have enjoyed the response and interest that has princrease in bookings of over 80%. Falcon look forward to another 10 I years with The Times."
